Sart's amusement deepened. "Well, I'll tell you what he wanted. He wanted to be able to rent it for yourself later in the Times, but by that time the price joke of the desert country will be on Mr. Sart."

Sart buckled on his spurs, but now his smile vanished. He rose and walking to where his foreman stood, gazed his face forward.

"Before I break your jaw, tell me exactly what you mean."

His rage grew fearful as he rode. His best plans were being brought to nothing by one man who had bulked him at every turn, who threatening now to destroy his power in the Southwest, to bring about his laughing stock among the ranchers. Yet it had seemed so safe to sell a few acres of useless desert land, and such easy money so sorely needed to maintain his growing army of henchmen. A spasm of hate passed over him, and he drove his reckless ed spurs deeper.

Out and bleeding from that cruel bit, the horse's tongue was lolling red when at last Sart caught sight of Dick's ranch house. In the view covered walls bathed in the light of morning. Behind the buildings a few cattle were grazing and a curling spiral of smoke from the tall chimney told of occupancy. A sunlit, very friendly place it seemed that dreamy morning, a place set enduring security.

Gwilling Sart drew nearer. Far up the lane his eyes made out a solitary figure leaning against the corral fence and his hand dropped to the automatic, then a moment later he recognized Stub. Relaxing to within a yard of him, Sart jerked his trembling horse to a halt just outside the corral.

"I'm looking for Dick Lowell. Where is he?"

Stub grinned, "I figgered that was the very question you might be wantin' to ask." Leisurely he rolled a cigarette. "Well, like as not Dick's out admirin' his new property. They tell me it's just bought some land awful cheap hereabouts."

Again Sart's thin lips drew back, and unconsciously his grip tightened on the heavy automatic at his side. "Tell me where he is, you—you—"

Stub's eyes narrowed, "Or what?"

Sart made no answer. The hand that held the automatic was slowly raising, and the black gaping opening weapon of death came forth from drawn from its holster.

At sight of it Stub stiffened, but not his eyes. Those of the others no less steadily than before, and his voice, he raised his hands.

"Don't shoot, Sart," he said simply.

No answer. It was the last word spoken. The thin lips had drawn even more tightly, and still the automatic rose, slowly, mercilessly, like the head of some venomous snake, then paused with three feet distant from Stub's unprotected breast. Then a second it held there, unmoving, while the two men gazed silently into each other's eyes, then with a cry of hate Sart's right barrel morning was shattered. A blue flame leaped from the gun's black muzzle, and with a sigh Stub turned over, one hailing backward step, then pitched slowly forward and lay still.

With a long exultant moment Sart's blazing eyes glared down on that motionless body, then turning his horse, he galloped away toward Verde.

Little by little the dust of Sart's pealing settled to earth, leaving the desert empty and peaceful beneath the sun. Slowly the wisp of smoke from the chimney ceased to thinned and disappeared. A horse whinnied impatiently from the corral, still the huddled figure by the corral fence made no sign. Stillness in all the desert seemed world except high up in the cloudless sky a vulture circled and circled in ever diminishing spirals, gliding lower, nearer, then suddenly, with a long outward sweep took off down wind.

Not until the prostrate figure had raised his head, and painfully, painfully, began crawling on hands and knees toward the ranch house door. He moved, ceased, moved again. Even more slowly that halting, tortured advance kept on, until at last the distance had been gained but no further. One last clutching limb, one long, choking moan, and now a motionless figure, with head sank forward among the desert sands and lay still.

Higher still the sun rose over the vast immensity of desert, symbol of

Our King and Queen on their Silver Jubilee

The reunion of the Royal Family in 1929

IMMEDIATELY after the great war, the royal family set about the task of the reconstruction of the empire. As mentioned before, the King and Queen did herculean tasks. But they were not alone. The rest of the family, the Prince of Wales, Prince Henry, Duke of Gloucester, the Duke of York and Princess Mary were called upon to share the noble burden.

Particularly was this true of the Prince of Wales. In 1919 the King named him his eldest son, and heir to the throne, should become his ambassador to the empire. In that year the young prince set out for Canada where he was acclaimed by the entire country. Never a prince of royal blood had ever before been received. From Saint John and Halifax to Vancouver thousands upon thousands of Canadians turned out en masse to welcome the popular and democratic prince who loved dancing and good fun.

He visited the United States before he returned home and the American people received him with the same acclaim as did Canada. Home again he went and then off to the Antipodes.

Meanwhile, the other princes and the princess had been travelling throughout the United Kingdom. Seldom was the royal family all home at one time.

it's FINE either way!

It's so handy to have a package of Kellogg's All-Bran in the kitchen. Serve it as a cereal. Use it also as a wholesome ingredient in your muffins, breads, omelets, waffles, etc.

Kellogg's All-Bran supplies "bulk" to aid regular habits. All-Bran is also rich in vitamin B, as well as iron, an element of the blood.

Two tablespoonfuls daily will correct common constipation, due to insufficient bulk in the diet. In severe cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

The "bulk" of All-Bran does not break down during digestion as does that of leafy vegetables, and is therefore more effective for furnishing the needed "bulk." It is a delicious laxative food . . . far better than laxative medicines.

Maroons Toast of the Town Defeat Leafs for Third Time To Win Battered Stanley Cup

Score 4-1 And Montreal Far Better Team in Series

SHAKY DEFENCE

First Win of Cup For Maroons Since 1926

By H. M. PETERS

Montreal, Apr. 10 (CP)—Marions and their manager, Tommy Gorman, were the toast of this hilarious, happy town today. They brought home the Stanley Cup last night and did it in the proper way for world hockey champions, with a knockout punch of three consecutive victories.

Better offensively and defensively than the fighting, powerful Toronto Maple Leafs, Maroons downed Conny Smythe's forces 4-1 in the third game here, following 3-2 and 2-1 wins at Toronto last Thursday and Saturday, to end the three-of-five final series.

It was Maroons' first Stanley Cup win since Nels Stewart, Babe Siebert, Reg Noble, Clint Benedict and company defeated Victoria Cougars in the spring of 1926. Year after year this great hockey club has reached the heights on stops from Harvey Jackson, Charlie Conacher and Hal Godfrey.

Cy Wentworth, pick of all defencemen in the game, steadyas rock on rearguard duty, hitting hard but cleanly and scoring a goal and an assist, was another hero. Baldy Northcott and Jimmy Ward, who smothered the all-star wings, Busher Conacher and Jackson, allowing them little room to operate, and Hec Jackson last Saturday, and getting a goal and an assist each last night, were others.

Leaf's Defence Unsteady.

The line of Russel Blinco, Earl Robinson and Dave Trottier, which scored the opening goals in the Maroon-Chicago second place playoff, in the Maroon-Ranger semi-final series and in the first two games of the Maroon-Toronto series, was exceptionally effective as a newcomer in the star lines of the games.

Leafs were not the driving force which ran roughshod over Montreal in the league season. Whether or not the tough four game series with Boston for the league title had taken too much out of Toronto, their defence was unsteady and their famed kid line flashed only at intervals, making five shots during the game. Maroons on the other hand reached peaks they did not touch during the injury and illness ridden regular campaign.

The Stanley Cup came home to the city from which it was first held when Lord Stanley of Preston offered it for competition in 1893, it was last here when Canadiens, at the peak of the form that entered them the title of "Flying French-men", won it in 1930 and repeated in 1931.

Toronto made a great battle to stretch the series another game but except for 12 minutes in the second period, they were outplayed. During those brilliant minutes the Leafs threw off their checks, set the Maroon defence back on its heels and had Alex Connell nervous and even paler than usual. Leafs looked like champions over that stretch.

The pressure told with Bill Thoms putting the Leafs ahead 1-0 on the left side after a pass from Frankie Finnigan on a long play started by King Clancy. It tied the score at one-all matching the goal scored by Jimmy Ward on a Hooley Smith-Cobalenia own end in the first period when Maroons were short a man.

Eased Attack.

But Toronto eased their attack after the goal. Instead of keeping the puck in Maroon territory as they had continually throughout the period, they were pressed back. Maroons sent two forwards streaking in tering defence for goals that spelled defeat for the N.H.L. titleholders.

Only 12 seconds separated the goals. Baldy Northcott, racing in from the blue line after he had given Ward a pass, was in time to deflect Ward's knee high shot into the net with George Hainsworth completely beaten.

They had barely faced off when Wentworth rushed from his defence, accepted Northcott's return pass at the blue line, worked his way through the Flash Hollett-Happy Day defence and found the cords with a short shot.

In the third period, although the Leafs were on a goal hunt all the time, Connell had but three shots to save as Maroons bounded their attacks into corners, blocked their shots, hurried the puck far away or staged fast breakaways that were a continuous threat to Hainsworth who served five times.

In the second minute of the period Leafs suffered another blow when Wentworth, on a fast dash after breaking up a Toronto attack sped straight up the defenceless ice. A Leaf forward caught him but Cy tried time to slip a pass to Ouellette Marker and the little right winger scored.

LEAFS OUTSCORED

(By The Canadian Press)

Perhaps Montreal Maroons are Stanley Cup Champions today because they shoot better than Toronto's National Hockey League Champions. Official records show Maroons had only one more shot that was good for goal than the Leafs in the three title games. But the red raiders fired more accurately.

Larry Northcott, for instance, was pretty busy checking Charlie Conacher, the National League's greatest marksman. He had time for only six shots on the Toronto goal tender two of them were goals. Conacher shot 14 times and Alex Connell stopped every one of them.

Here is a list of scorers with their shooting percentages:

Golden Gloves Tournament Produces Excellent Bouts; Eight Champions Crowned

Stewart-Warner - Alemite A.C. Sponsor Fine Show

14 BOUTS GIVEN

Show Runs Gamut From Knock Outs to Split Decisions

Eight district championships were awarded during the 14 boxing bouts to be staged in the first Golden Gloves boxing tournament ever presented in this city when three bouts were won via the knock out route at the Belleville Armouries last evening. The boxing show was presented by the Stewart Warner Alemite A.C. under the auspices of the local Kinsmen's Club and drew close to 500 fans, who stamped their approval on the majority of the bouts presented by Promoter Dick Cook.

Final district championship honors came from the featherweight scrape were all jammed into three hours of wholesome recreation and sport that saw knockouts, popular decisions and one rather mediocre exhibition affair. All classes ranging from a novice bout between two local kiddies at 40 pounds to the covering heavyweights of 200 pounds were included on a varied card that pleased the fans. The various winners declared following the eliminations will be eligible to compete in the provincials at Toronto later this month, last night's local show producing distinct championships.

Matchmaker Allen saged one of most popular bouts to terminate his all-star boxing affair, when "Shorty" Fisher of the S.W.A.C. Belleville, outpointed Johnny Tea'e of the Airport with exactly three minutes in the three-round final round. Fisher proved the aggressor throughout the entire three rounds and had the uncontrolled Teale repeatedly clinching to save further punishment as the winner unlashed a terrific right hook over the left cheek that landed on the point of the chin and he dropped for the toll. Teale was out for full five minutes. This was the part of the bout Teale seemed willing to mix matters, but subsequently tired.

Bentley Scores K.O.

A second K.O. was registered in the heavyweight class when Ted Bentley of Napanee knocked out Hugh Gilmour of Trenton in exactly 1:54 during the first round. The boys seemed willing to mix matters to open hostilities and Gilmour rocked Bentley with a right swing to the head just prior to the knock out. Bentley, after wearing attack worked inside of Gilmour's defence and shot a short right hook to the Trenton lad's jaw and the latter dropped for the count, as Referee Bert Wells counted to ten. Gilmour, to later carry his defeat to his adversary to his corner. Bentley was the heavier and sharp weight title in less than two minutes of the first round.

The third knockout came in the featherweight championship of the evening, when "Shorty" Fisher of S.W.A.A.C. dropped Eddie Bruce, D.P., No. 26, Trenton, with a sharp right upper out that landed flush on Bruce's chin during the last two minutes of fighting in the initial round. The lads were mixing matters and exchanging blows in rapid fire at close quarters, when the K.O. came suddenly as Fisher was about to win the final bout in a similar manner, registering two knockouts in his two ring appearances, the reverse of the night.

One of the feature bouts of the night was the Wheeler-Maracle bout for the district featherweight championship, that Wheeler won following the fiercest and most exciting bout of the night. Living up to their fighting reputations they tossed caution to the winds and mixed matters from the start. Maracle off in as short order as possible, but the ex-Oshawa lad stood his opponent and battled him to a standstill. Wheeler used a stinging right over-hand punch to keep his advantage while Maracle whipped repeated right upper cuts into Wheeler's midsection. The bout was thoroughly enjoyed and both boxers left the ring to receive a great ovation afforded local mittsers.

New Champion

A new 90 pound district champion was crowned when Kid Vieau, of the Bay Street A.C., Trenton, defeated the ex-champion Jo Jo Sarnelli of the S.W.A.A.C. in the finals and win the admiration of every fan present. Vieau, weighed only 79 pounds, was forced to beat his heavier and more experienced boys in Samain and Graine. Setting up a clever defence in the matter of covering himself up from attack and shifting perfectly, young Vieau completely baffled his adversary's attempted pugnacious attacks and himself used a powerful over-arm right cross punch, that won him two decisions that met with the approval of the crowd. Vieau demonstrated that he could step in and slug with the best and had excellent ring generalship throughout. He'll be a ring worthy champion, if being his first appearance before the fight public, in which he won a place of admiration.

Gordie Morris, S.W.A.A.C, who came out of retirement, won the feather and bantamweight championship, by the strict by defaulting opponents at 112 or 116 pounds being willing to step in and exchange leather with him. He fought an exhibition bout with O. Wheeler of Oshawa, last night.

Bill Crawford, local veteran lightweight fighting star, S.W.A.A.C., coasted home to an easy final victory to win the 126 pound district title over a six-minute affair. Crawford was forced to fight twice in the ring last night to outpoint his opponents by taking the decision in the first encounter from Jack Angell, another stalwe-mate, Crawford had Angell down for the count of nine in the first of the two-round preliminary. The present district 135 pound title holder had little difficulty in defeating either opponent, Harry Bishop, S.W.A.C., Crawford has forced to fight twice in the ring last night to outpoint his opponents by taking the decision in the first encounter from Jack Angell, another stalwe-mate, Crawford had Angell down for the count of nine in the first of the two-round preliminary. The present district 135 pound title holder had little difficulty in defeating either opponent, Harry Bishop, S.W.A.C., and Gordie Wheeler, Oshawa, 119, no decision, exhibition bout (catch-weights).

Palmatier brothers, "Tiger" and "Dynamite" fought four rounds, no decision exhibition at 40 pounds.

Elimination Bouts

Bill Crawford, 135, S.W.A.A.C. won decision over Art Angell, 135, Belleville, after nearly three (lightweights).

Eddie Bruce, D.P., No. 28 won decision over Bernie Edwards, 132, Madoc, three rounds (welterweights).

Johnnie Samain, D.P., No. 27 won decision over Kid Kelley, Trenton, three rounds (featherweights).

90 pound semi-finals—Kid" Vieau, 79, Trenton, gained decision over Jo Jo Samain, 81, Bay Street, Trenton.

WRESTLING

Hi there sport fans, you'll remember when you were here you to look for this week's news and here it is; what a line up and here are the boys that are going to be here going to give you a smart program, just one and a half hours of the best wrestling it has been our privilege to bring you. There will not be a dull moment from start to finish, look them over; "Norman Farewell" the boy who is the idol of Belleville boys who never says quit, vs. Tony Otto at 110 lbs. who is not going to Waldy Meyers who has nearly worn out the Toronto printing presses talking about his wrestling ability, a smaller lad at 135 lbs. and who is the Canadian Champion on of today, vs. Benny Englebon a raring tearing lad of 146 lbs. and the Ontario Champion and when these lads start you will be sitting on air for the forty five minutes they are going to it. Then we come to the main bout of the evening, here we get a slatty stream bout with two of your cold friends, Jimmy Allen the lightweight champion of Canada vs. Phil Lawson the former lightweight champion of Canada. The last time these two wrestlers entertained you, it finished up with Stanley Jimmy getting a sprained ankle and Phil with two broken ribs. We hope that nothing like that will happen this time, but words from me cannot express their ability. When these two boys have finished tying knots with each other you will wish they had still another hour to go, and so we advise if you want real good wrestling this is the place and on on Thursday April 11th, at 8.45 p. m.

WOLVE'S HOWL IS SILENCED

Winnipeg Monarchs Win First Memorial Cup

By HERBERT A. RONEY

Winnipeg, Apr. 10 (CP) — The howl of Sudbury Cub Wolves that has echoed menacingly down the Memorial Cup trail was practically stilled today. It reached its crescendo in the forty minutes of their first game of a best-of-three series for the Dominion junior hockey title but it was muffled to a mere whisper to Winnipeg Monarchs 7-5.

There was a deep sensible heard in the Club camp however as the Winnipeg champions settled down to the business of repairing jagged holes in their defence bulwark for the second game tomorrow and third, if necessary, Saturday.

They found Cub Manitobans in speed and their hockey craft was evident. They faced their nemesis, however, in little Earl Carbert, the plucky opposition goalie. Time and again Carbert, in the second thirty five minutes of play, made spectacular saves that kept the Monarchs from a safe lead.

Three times Sudbury scored. Each time they came back. In green-sweatered waves they closed in on the Manitoban defence. There was no weakness though in the armour of Gaudreau.

The eastern titlists were taken off guard by the dazzling combination flashed at them from the faceoff. The close of the initial session found Sudbury with a 3-2 advantage. They scored in the second period but the Monarchs came back in the third and margin. Each team scored in the third period which ended in a blazing exhibition of power and speed.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Congratulations to Albert W. "Army" Armstrong, of Oshawa and well known ex-Belleville athlete, distinguished himself last Saturday by winning the doubles in the Central Ontario badminton championships at Oshawa. "Army" was coupled with Jack Davidson and they played under the Oshawa Garrison colors. Congratulations are due "Army", it being his second triumph at championship honors in many years. Previous to playing doubles Albert Armstrong won the singles champion for the same district in badminton. This pair defeated the Bowmanville entry.

One week from next Monday, April 22nd, soccer football will be introduced after many years of absence, into public and separate schools as a recreation or sport. Through the efforts of a few interested in the Old Country pastime a school league has been formed, with a fine cup or trophy being donated by the K. W. Harper, master of the local Bank of Commerce. Public School Mickey's Academy, Queen Victoria; Queen's Alexandra, Queen Mary, King George and possibly the Prince of Wales School will compose the league. Some 20 or 25 years ago a thriving public and separate school soccer football league flourished among the local grammar schools, but of late years the game has not met with such marked success. Several attempts to introduce the game into the schools is purely for the purpose of educating the boys into playing the game in order, that seasoned players may result in later years.

In the matter of adult or mature age soccer football being returned into the Dominion at present an attempt to form a league in the Trent Valley is being made. Already the Belleville United Club has organized and is at the head of the prospective loop to include, such centres as Trenton, Brighton, the R.C.A.F., Stirling, Deloro, Madoc and Tweed. Should the league get under way football team has been operated in Belleville, with a fair degree of success, goodly number of expert players are now residing. Of course there will needs be a considerable amount of work done in the other centres, but those interested in the game locally are not leaving a stone unturned in the matter of organization.

A sudden death game will decide the city basketball championship, when the Deseron A.C. and the Y. M. C. A. "Quints" meet at the Collegiate gymnasium on Friday night. Local cage fans have been waiting months for this tit-bit and here it is.

The much talked of Golden Gloves boxing tournament passed into history a successful one, before nearly 500 boxing fans last night. Without fear of contradiction we suggest, that the nightly programme was one of the best boxing cards to be presented in Belleville in quite some years. As a whole the bouts were quite evenly matched, only in the lightweight division when Bill Crawford eased home in a canter to win his two bouts and district title, and the two defaults, that gave Gordie Morris two district titles goals, were there any signs of district champions getting their laurels without a struggle. Promoter Cook is also labored long and hard to put on his show last night and was surely rewarded by the calibre of bouts, that were put on by the boxers. Not one of the contestants to enter let their matchmaker down and both the Stewart Warner Alemite A. C. and the Kinsmen's Club, to say nothing of Promoter Allen, are to be congratulated.

The one boxer to catch our eye was the new 90... pound district champion, little Kid Vieau of Trenton, who weighs exactly 79 pounds and beat two more experienced and heavier lads quite handily. Young Vieau demonstrated, that he had everything that goes to make a champion. He can hit, he can take a sock and he has a beautiful style in the ring. Time will tell as they make them, Another district champ to win distinction was "Shorty" Fisher, the local lad, who won his two bouts and the welterweight district title. The ex-Oshawa protege of the three registered, he also having one previous in the semi-finals, was quickly getting down to young Vieau from Trenton, it was the kid's first ring appearance. He's a comer.

Undoubtedly the bout, that had the fans' eye and appreciation was the Wheeler-Maracle bout in which Wheeler regained his featherweight title. It was a gory affair with plenty of leather being swung and low-blow slugging than is usually witnessed in amateur boxing. Wheeler did not win the decision without a struggle as the decision was split, but Maracle just showed enough lack of condition in the last minute to allow Wheeler to grab a couple of hard punishing clouts that gave him victory. Undoubtedly it was the most thrilling bout of the night and also one of the most enjoyed. The lads were not slow in applauding the show bears repeating in the near future.

The Montreal Maroons showed their superiority as moneyed players and made it three straight in the Wheeler-Maracle bout in the 1935 world's series over the Toronto Maple Leafs by downing the latter 4 to 1 last night. Incidently it began to look as though Connie Smythe's charges are far from moneyed players, they failed him in the N.H.L. championship versus Detroit last year and again this fall by the wayside, when they met such a powerful team as the Germans possesses on the Maroons' Stanley Cup series to be a hobby with Gorman of late years.

We forgot to mention that Allan Meagher, Oshawa, O.B.A.A. swimmer, was one of the local representatives at the O.B.A.A. conclave at Kitchener on Saturday. Allen was a visiting delegate for the Haldimand County League.

"HARD WORK"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

By Leslie A. Hill

The bandits, in fleeing from the office with the payroll, had jammed the cripple's wheel-chair in the door. It blocked pursuit, and they got away. Nearly twelve thousand dollars went with them.

When Ferguson arrived in the squad car he quickly got the details. "How did you happen to be in here?" he asked the cripple. The office manager interrupted to answer. "Oh, he's all right officer," he said. "He's been coming in to sell newspapers and magazines. It wasn't his fault. They just jammed his chair in the door. He didn't do it."

Ferguson considered for a moment. Then he said, "I have to ask questions, you know." He held out his hand. The cripple took it. "That's all right," he told the detective.

There seemed to be little to work on. A few vague and conflicting descriptions, that was all. "Those birds knew just when to come in and just where the payroll was," Ferguson told Captain Henry, in charge of the progress, on the job. "Somebody signalled them. And I think it's that cripple. He's got enough on him now as it is. But I want the others."

Reasonable!

Quickly he explained. "Hm," said Capt. Henry. "Sounds reasonable. Most men would overlook a thing like that. Want him tailed?"

Ferguson shook his head. "Leave him alone," he said. "We've got his address. It will be the real one. They wouldn't be taking any chances with a phony. I'll take a couple of uniformed men and go around to see him tonight."

"Picking on a cripple, are you?" said Betty Hamilton that evening when Ferguson told her about the holdup and part of his plans. "I'll stick on anybody I thought guilty," he answered. "And if I crack this one it will probably mean a promotion. And you know what that means!" Betty nodded. She knew. She was tired of knowing—and waiting.

That night, Ferguson, accompanied by two uniformed policemen, entered the ground-floor room occupied by the cripple, who had given his name as Barnes. Ferguson pointed to the wheel chair and said: "Do you have to use that?"

"Not always," Barnes answered. "But when I carry my stock of papers, I do. Why?"

"We're taking you down to headquarters," Ferguson replied. "Just wanted to know if you'd need it. Or if you'd rather talk——" He left the sentence unfinished.

"That payroll holdup," the detective answered. "You were in on that. I know you were and I can prove it. Now you can take your choice. Tell us who the others were and where they are, or take twenty years by yourself. If we get them and get the money back, you're out of it. Nobody will ever know. But make up our mind fast."

Thieves' Honor

It wasn't fast. It was slow. But Barnes finally made up his mind, made his choice; there being no honor among thieves except in the proverb. Faced with the relaisation that he was caught, he talked, particularly after Ferguson convinced him that the others intended themselves to double-cross him.

An hour later the four men named by him had been arrested and all of the money recovered. Some of it still in the pay envelopes.

"But how did you know the cripple was guilty?" Betty asked Ferguson later.

"I didn't," he answered. "But I knew he was faking something. It was too much to believe that a fake like him just happened to be on the scene. He gave the signal and was right there in his chair so that it could be used to block the door. I knew he was a fake when I shook hands with him. In fact, that's why I did it."

"Did how?" asked Betty.

"I used to know a fellow who had to go around in one of those wheel chairs," Ferguson answered. "You've seen them—the ones they propel by pushing a wooden rim on the wheel? Well, they'll put callouses on your hands just like a horse's hoof. When I shook hands with Barnes his hand wasn't callioured. He'd been using the chair for only a short time. They had everything else planned, but they forgot about that. Pushing a wheel chair is hard work and it leaves a mark that you can't mistake."

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and ma was doing the crossword puzzle and I was doing my homework and whileoling without whileoling anything special, and ma said, Benny for land sakes will you stop that whileoling if it can be called such. You an hour ralier an ear just 2 berds of one feather, neither one of them can carry a tune as far as from here to the door, she said.

Come, come, those are hard werds, pop said, Modesty forbids me to speek for myself, but I always seemed to me that Benny has a voice like a bell and a whistle like a berd and an ear as true as a tuning fork, he said, and I said, And pop too, ma, I think pop's got a voice like a piano and a ear like a orchester.

My my, such mutual compliments ma said, and pop said. And the more I think about them the more I beleve they're true, and if we're that good separately what must we be together? We'd proberly be one of the grate perfect combinations of history, like peeches and cream, or pancakes and sirrup, or bacon and eggs. By golies Benny, let's try it, how about Old Lang Sine? he said.

Sweel, I said, and pop said, Let's go.

Which we did, me coy knowing none of the werds but singing them extry loud to make up for the ones I didn't, and pop said, that was pritty good for a start.

A what for land sakes, and me with this crossword puzzle, to concentrate on, not to speek of the rainbow fishing, ma said, and pop said, Tipperary comes next in our singing program, at least unless you admit you never heard 2 such voices in all your life.

I admit it was a cleer conscience and that's putting it mildly, ma said.

Proberly meaning it sourcastic but me and pop let on we took it for a compliment and sang Tipperary anyways, pretending it was by request.

Chance Sun Picked Choice Among Poor Derby Entries

But Writer Thinks Boxthorn May Thunder Home Ahead

CHANCE SUN

Chance Sun, owned by Joseph E. Widener, and best-liked of the entries for the Kentucky Derby, is s

By CHARLES "HORSES" AYERS

Toronto, April 10—Of the 110 three-year-old gallopers nominated for the Kentucky Derby less than a dozen are what the average racing fan could call high class thoroughbreds, according to the "dope" chart. Check out the name of J. E. Widener's Change Sun, William Woodward's Omaha, Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Payable Bid, Mrs. Payne Whitney's Jamestown and Plat Eye, Col. Edward Bradley's Brushwood, E. R. Bradley's Boxthorn, C. V. Whitney's Today and Walter M. Jeffords's Commonwealth and the remainder of the nominees for the $40,000 purse could be bunched together and described as a band of second-raters.

Which is the best of one lot is conjectural. Chance Sun, because of his victory in the Futurity and the Grand Union Hotel Stakes, has been made the favorite among racing fans, but his record is far from a brilliant one.

He faced the barrier thirteen times during his first year under colors and won only three races and was out of the money five times. But the records of his prospective opponents are not much better, and while he probably is entitled to the questionable honor of being favorite, any one of the horses named above appears to have as good a chance of winning as the Widener color-bearer.

As is usually the case each year, many of the eligibles are splendid specimens at some time or other have displayed high speed in races or trials and because of slight mishaps or illness did not get an opportunity to show their real worth.

In this category we would class the following William Woodward's Jr. Reverley, Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Young Native, C. B. Schaffer's Finance, Mrs. H. C. Phipps's Bellum and C. V. Whitney's Wizard.

In the writer's opinion on cold dope the horse that should come tearing down the stretch on the front end to garner the major part of this important American turf fixture is Col. E. R. Bradley's Boxthorn. I think he is a much better colt than his record shows. He won only two races last year but reports that are coming from the lone entrant of Bradley's training well and has developed into a handsome individual.

There are two fillies in the race—Nellie Flag and Vicarage—which might duplicate the feat accomplished by Harry Payne Whitney's Regret in 1915. Regret is the only one of her sex that has ever captured the Kentucky Derby.

Nellie Flag displayed splendid form in 1934. After winning the Matron and Selima Stakes she went south and defeated a big band of colts in the Kentucky Jockey Club Stakes.

Vicarage won four races and on two occasions ran in a way to warrant the belief that she was of championship calibre.

six-to-one favorite to take the Churchill Downs classic.

PLAY FOR "T' COOP"

W. B. ALBION STAR

One of the best goal-getters on the Wednesday is Mark Hooper, sterling right-winger who will line up in the cup final at Wembley Stadium when Sheffield Wednesday battle West Bromwich Albion for "t'Coop" on April 27. Hooper, product of the north-east coast started as a goal-keeper, but didn't grow tall enough to became a wing. He came to Sheffield from Darlington with a large fee changing hands. Since then he has always been among the team's high scorers with a brilliant dribbling style and a deadly accuracy on corner shots.

TED SANDFORD

West Bromwich will send out at least one home-rower when they oppose Sheffield Wednesday for the English Football cup at Wembley Stadium on April 27. Ted Sandford was born almost within sight of the West Bromwich Stadium and has never travelled far. His remarkable smooth style on the field with ease and consistency love mark his play. He turned out with the Albion first in 1930 and took a cup medal in 1931. He is still in his early twenties with a lengthy playing career before him.

GOLF FACTS

NOT THEORIES

By ALEX J. MORRISON

It takes so many things to beat good field these days. The winner must get the breaks at every stage of the game in addition to being able to take advantage of them by an ability to tighten down when necessary. The incomparable Georgian may or may not be able to do this from year to year, but he will still be the popular idol as long as he appears on the links.

The fans who follow the play of Bobby Jones since his retirement from competition will have something to look forward to each year so long as the former king of the links continues to participate in the annual invitation tournament over his Augusta course. His success or otherwise is secondary to the fact that the man who once was the greatest of all golfers is again swinging his clubs in competition.

Whenever Jones has been beaten in the past he has returned strong. In the first invitation match he was defeated, and his showing in the second was not particularly bright, though he was undoubtedly the sentimental favorite of the players and gallery alike. However being popular with the galleries does not win matches alone, and to outdrive opponents and win matches one must have the game to do it. Bobby is away from active golf a great deal more of course than he was during his active competitive career, and lack of practice beats many a golfer. It can do the same with Bobby.

Recently I've helped a dozen players to start the season. They all set out with the same fault. Feeling strong and wanting to drive 300 yards, they all pressed their heads off.

It's easy to forget that strength matters not so much as how you apply it. You shouldn't expect to be on your game until you've played at least several rounds. Then you'll be using less strength and applying it more efficiently. You'll get more distance with less effort.

If you start the season trying to hit the ball, chances are you'll have this fault for some time. Start easy. You can't start too easy. Then you'll gradually work into your best swing and you'll do so in the least possible time. The easy way is the short way.

Percentages are as important in golf as in anything else when it comes to winning. In spite of this I've never seen them mentioned in articles on the game.

The man who knows percentages, particularly about his own game, always has a good chance of beating his opponent. The best example of this is Hal Sims, the bridge expert. He wins as often at golf as he does at bridge. He knows exactly what his average performance is with every club in the bag. The result is he never puts any pressure on himself by overrating his game.

Sims doesn't have to play his best to win, because his opponent invariably overrates himself. It doesn't matter if you shoot in the 90's, 80's or 70's, you should know your true average. Then you'll know your chances of making any shot.

SCRAP OF PAPER EAGERLY SOUGHT TO PROVE POINT

Hottest Clash of Session Between Hon. Mr. Henry and Premier

PREMIER STAKES SEAT

Henry Says He Was "Deceived" About Power Bill

Toronto, April 11—(CP)—Returning to Queen's Park after their first night of real sleep Friday, Ontario Legislators today conjectured as to the answer of members hunting in the basement of the Legislative buildings for a piece of paper, which bore a message from opposition Leader George S. Henry to Premier Mitchell Hepburn and the Premier's reply.

Precipitating the hottest clash of the session, Mr. Henry yesterday charged the Premier "deliberately deceived" him Tuesday night by not stating in the note the Queen's power controlled expenditure bill, which received second reading, that it would be sent to committee during the night. Mr. Hepburn told newspapermen afterwards he "never said a word immediately" if the note failed to mention the power bill.

Premier Hepburn adjourned an acrimonious debate after midnight. It had been in continuous session from Monday afternoon until four o'clock yesterday morning and resumed again in the afternoon.

Meanwhile legislators wondered today if another marathon session faced them. The power bill was scheduled for third reading today Conservatives planned to oppose it line by moving it be referred to committee, and this would throw open the whole debate again. Called when the bill was given second reading at 2.30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon,

Henry Explains Note

Recalling members of his family were present in the House Tuesday night and urged him to go home, Mr. Henry said he wrote a note to the Premier asking what bills were likely to come up and received a reply, which did not mention the power bill.

"If the power bill had been mentioned, I would not have thought of leaving the House to see the premier.

"I tell you, you are not telling the truth," replied Mr. Hepburn to the Opposition Leader's contention the bill did not mention the power bill.

"You don't know what principle is," retorted Mr. Hepburn. "I will be the rules of the House committed me to think of you."

"I think of you," Mr. Henry shot back.

"There aren't enough words in the English language to express what I think of you," Mr. Henry shot back.

Declaring if the government members wished him to leave the House for good, he would do so, Mr. Henry said he was concerned with the Premier "who deliberately deceived me last night."

Mr. Hepburn replied:

"He says I wrote him a note, indicating the power bill was not going to come up in committee." Mr. Hepburn told newspapermen after the House adjourned for dinner. "And as a result of that note he went home and wasn't able to take part in the discussion of the measure, when it did go into committee. Well he can produce, that scrap of paper and prove to the House, that in fact I mentioned in the note the power bill among other bills I indicated to him would be called. I'll resign my seat here immediately."

Other bills introduced by Mr. Croll provided for consolidation by city councils of tax arrears more than a year old and for property owners to pay these over a period of years. Lowering from 10 to 25 years the penalties for non-payment and formal constitution of the newly-created Department of Municipal Affairs.

Baker, former resident of this city in an interview with the "Prince Albert Daily Herald", a daily publication of that city.

Mr. Baker who has lived in the west since this removal from Belleville many years ago is a brother of Mrs. C. W. Fisher and Mrs. E. G. Rorker of this city. During the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, while still in his early twenties, Mr. Baker was promoted to the rank of sergeant while serving with the Prince Albert volunteers, at the time of the rebellion in partnership with the late Harry Walters, came from Prince Albert he opened a grocery store in that city.

In his interview, Mr. Baker recalls:

Looting of Store

Fifty years ago tonight the looting of the Walters and Baker Store at Batoche on the South Saskatchewan River marked the start of the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, which spread terror, death and destruction through the thinly populated regions along the Saskatchewan in that bitterly cold March.

F. C. Baker, who celebrated his 71th birthday recently was one of the pioneers who volunteered for service with the government forces and he has retained the story of the capture of his partner after their store supplies were seized by rebels, and later events with which he is familiar. Prince Albert was then a town with a population of about 700.

In September, 1882, Mr. Baker who was in partnership with the late Harry Walters, came from Winnipeg and established a store at Batoche remaining there until December when he continued on to Prince Albert and began business here. Mr. Walters came out in the spring of 1883 and the Batoche store was reopened and business went on.

Treatment Promised for Now Incurable Bright's Disease

Extract Used Under Secret Investigation For Some Time

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
(Associated Press Science Editor)

Detroit, April 11 (AP)—A history extract which promises a treatment for now incurable Bright's Disease was reported for the first time today at a meeting of the Federation of American Societies for experimental biology.

Bright's Disease is one of the dozen foremost causes of death in Canada and the United States.

The extract described today has been under strictly secret investigation for about three years under auspices of the chemical foundation. It has been tried on human beings with "very encouraging" results.

It was given to persons in coma after all hope had been abandoned. Some revived remarkably. Others were wholly unaffected. Some for some but this difference is still sought.

In the clinic of the late Allen Winter Rowe at Boston a number of bright's Disease patients were tried. About half improved. Results were negative with the others.

Benjamin Jablons, M.D., of New York City, said the extract was taken from kidneys of hogs. Extraction in pure form is still a difficult process.

It causes a drop in blood pressure in both humans and animals. It also increases excretion of salt. The increased excretion of salt may explain the mechanism of its favorable action on kidney trouble.

DISTRICT WATERS TO BE RE-STOCKED

Favorable Report Received From Department of Game and Fisheries

Favorable reports in relationship to the re-stocking of local waters was received following the weekly casting exercises of the Belleville Anglers' Association at the Armories last evening. The executive committee of that organization then met at the Y.M.C.A. to discuss plans for their coming open season's meeting to be held at the City Hall next Wednesday night.

The report of the chairman of the conservation committee was most favorable as definite assurance that local streams and lakes would be surveyed and these found favorable, re-stocked by the Game and Fisheries Department of the Ontario Government. Owing to the fact the local anglers have been in communication with the two years in relationship to the re-stocking of local waters, this news was received with enthusiasm by the club last night, it being one of the many features to be introduced by the Belleville Anglers' Association since its inception.

The casting committee reported progress in the weekly casting competitions being staged at the Armouries each Wednesday night for cash for an open plug and fly casting tournament to be staged next month, were reported and that time valuable prizes will be awarded to the various group winners.

Plans for the visit of Wm. Lang and Thos. Hall, two expert casters of members of the Toronto Anglers' Association, to Belleville next week were completed. The meeting will be held in the City Hall and will be of interest to not only anglers, fishermen, merchants but citizens in large. A demonstration of fly casting only, along with action pictures taken by Mr. Jull and Mr. Lang will be shown in conjunction with a talk on the advantages of angling towards the uplift of business trade in the community. This meeting is open to all interested.

BLAME CRASH TO HOBOES' ACT

Driver of Truck Says He Tried to Frighten Them Off

Chatham, Ont., April 11.—(CP) —Crashing of a heavy laden truck of the Maple City transport over an embankment here, killing Frederick Cain near Hamilton and its destruction by fire last night was blamed by Carl Lees, driver, on two hoboes he attempted to steal some of the freight.

According to Lees, hoboes wait for transports on the hills and then rain to make their raids for foodstuffs, calculating they are safe because drivers cannot stop their machines on the declivity.

Frank Findlay, manager of the Maple City Transport Company, said that Lees, who was climbing Mountain road, two men jumped on the back with the intention of stealing freight. Lees heard them, and in the struggle that ensued he lost his steering wheel, got out on the running board of the tractor with the idea of scaring them off. The wheels of the tractor, however, got into soft gravel and were unable to get back onto the road. When he saw the transport would not be saved, he grabbed his freight bills and leaped just as the big machine rolled down the embankment.

STRESA PARLEY PRELIMINARIES ARE UNDER WAY

Sir John Simon Tells of Visits to Berlin And East

FRANCE AND RUSSIA

Bilateral Agreement Will Be Brought Up at Stresa

By GEORGE HAMBLETON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Stresa, Italy, April 11 (CP Cable) —In the quiet recesses of Isola Bella on an island in Lake Maggiore, the three-power conference on European security got under way today.

The conference met from 10.30 a.m., to 1.30 in the afternoon and then adjourned for lunch. After deciding to take up the question of France's appeal to the League of Nations at 5 p.m.

The French protest to the League against the German repudiation of defiance of the Versailles Treaty is to come before a special League Council Monday. It is official indicated France would firmly insist on the Council acting on her protest at that time. It was said it would be supported by a memorandum detailing this latest violation might lead to threat of war.

Work of Missions

The first session of the conference consisted of a round table exchange of views on the situation, including an exposition by the British of the results of their missions to Berlin, Moscow and Warsaw.

The conference deliberations moreover affect three powers, Germany, Russia and Poland, none of which are present, and the question arises of inviting them to a subsequent conference, possibly in London.

Simon's Statement

After a brief greeting from Premier Mussolini, who acted as chairman, Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, made a lengthy statement describing his visit to Reichsfuehrer Hitler and the four made by Capt. Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, to Moscow, Warsaw and Berlin.

With Mussolini taking the lead the Italian and French put a series of questions to Sir John which covered every aspect of the situation as revealed to Sir John and Captain Eden on their trip.

Mussolini and Premier MacDonald asked the French to inform them at 5 p.m. today of the contents of the French memorandum which will be submitted to the League Council on the French protest against Germany.

Franco-Russian Pact

London, April 11 (AP)—An authoritative source said today the new Franco-Russian bilateral agreement had been placed on the schedule of the Stresa conference.

The French, it was said, will be asked to explain fully the aims of the pact which France and Russia have agreed upon in principle.

It was understood Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, were given a general outline of the pact yesterday while they were in Paris and they decided it would be necessary to discuss it at Stresa in connection with questions regarding the strengthening of the League of Nations' covenant.

THREE PARTS GOLD ONE OF SILVER IN U.S. CURRENCY

16 to 1 Silver Purchase Bill Passes Senate Committee

METAL PRICE RISES

Sharp Advances Scored in Markets on Everywhere Today

Washington, April 11 (AP)—The Senate Agriculture Committee today approved the Wheeler-Nichols bill to 16 to 1 silver purchase bill designed to inflate United States currency and speed the attainment of a metallic currency reserve of one part silver and three parts gold.

The committee action, taken without a record vote, ignored silverites into fresh activity, which began late yesterday when President Roosevelt raised the price for newly-mined domestic silver from 64 .2 to 71 cents an ounce.

The bill would direct the treasury to purchase at least 50,000,000 ounces of silver a month until the proportion of the white metal reached one-fourth of the monetary stocks.

Purchases would be suspended whenever the price of silver equalled in purchasing power one ounce of pure gold but would remain suspended only so long as that ratio was not disturbed.

New York, April 11 (AP)—A further worldwide rise in silver prices and accelerated acquisition was seen in Wall Street today as the probable consequences of the United States treasury boost in its price for newly mined silver from 64.2 cents an ounce to 71 cents an ounce.

Price Rises Steadily

The world price quickly resumed its climb. Foreign bar silver for immediate delivery in New York at 66 cents an ounce, up 1 1-2 cents from yesterday's final bid of 64.1-2 cents, and the highest since 1926 in Monday, June 1929, jumped upward in feverish trading.

Advance at Toronto

Toronto, April 11 (CP)—Another sharp advance in the world price for silver, which on Monday rose 2 cents an ounce, up 1 1-2 cents from yesterday's final bid of 64.1-2 cents, and the highest since 1926 in Monday, June 1929, jumped upward in feverish trading.

PRODUCTION OF SYRUP IS HIGH

Prices Accordingly in Some Sections Have Dropped

(By The Canadian Press)

Bright sunny days and cold nights that persisted into the late Spring this year sent Canada's annual maple tree, the maple, into such profuse production of sap, that tappers throughout Ontario have been working full time collecting a yield that in one section of the Province threatens to force prices to all-time lows.

Everywhere except in the district around Brockville and Belleville, pitors have held up on a par with or slightly lower than last year. Kitchener reports contracts at $2.00 a gallon retail compared with $2.25 to $2.50 a gallon last year. Ottawa district tappers are marketing their product at from $1.35 to $1.50 a gallon, with quality higher than last year's flow. The price at Belleville yesterday was $1.20 a gallon.

But Leeds and Grenville producers in the Brockville area are blocking a falling market. Ideal weather conditions and the eagerness of farmers to realize on their crop at once have forced prices below the dollar mark and a large surplus is reported to be accumulating. Sugar prices so far have held at last year's level of 20 to 25 cents a pound but it is expected they too will fall into line shortly.

SOME FARMERS WORKING ON LAND

West Huntingdon—A few of the farmers have started to do some work on the land, such as filling in ditches, cleaning stones and light cultivating. There seems to be a feeling among the farmers that there should be a rain before the land is ready to work properly; in fact the ground is too dry for the meadows and fall grain. There is only a short time of year for a drought, but strange things are happening these days.

The sap has ceased to run and those who tapped say they are well rewarded for their efforts as this year was the best in a number of previous years.

CRICKET IN SCHOOLS

Cricket in the schools of Ontario is the object of the Ontario Cricket Association. Those who know what the game has meant to the youth of England and the rest of the British Isles feel like cheering this news.

Not only does the association favor the introduction of the game into the schools, but it plans to circulate information in regard to the sport; it hopes to show pictures of the Australian team in Canada at play; it will invite local chapters of the I.O.D.E., and other organizations whose aims accord with the maintenance of British traditions to assist in providing equipment, and it favors the game at boys' summer camps.

A great object animates the association —the idea that in Ontario schools of a game which is and has been the tie of Britishers which is a fitting endeavor in the King's Jubilee year. It will bring satisfaction to the Old Land to realize that Canada is identifying herself with that particularly British school game "on which the sun never sets."

Not long ago Inspector H. A. Tanser of Chatham, lamented the fact that in the present sports of schools the great majority of students are not participating in games but are mere spectators. This he felt regrettable because competition in games like cricket develops individuality and self-reliance, and accordingly he advocated the addition of this game.

One would like to see signs of interest in this sport in the schools of this part of the province. It is to be hoped that the efforts of the Ontario Cricket Association will inspire the formation of cricket teams in local schools.

Col. W. N. Ponton, a member of the Belleville Board of Education and a lifelong advocate of the maintenance of British traditions, is also a public life but in games has received a copy of the association's aims to make cricket an Ontario school sport. Col. Ponton reads the fact that Canada "it is not cricket" has passed into the language of the British race. Surely a proof of the cleanness and manliness of this great sport.

BETTER FILMS

Those who have had the pleasure of seeing some of the modern films which handle some of the world's greatest stories, realize that film fans are getting exceptionally fine fare. Such plays as "David Copperfield" with its richness of character, healthy sentiment and wide canvass which entertains as well as instructs the playgoer are one of the most potential factors in modern society.

How much better such films are than stories of gangland and the nauseating sex dramas which are beginning to wane!

Of course it is probably unfair to place an ordinary sex film as a gangster picture with its poor distortion of life's value against the wealth of human character and fidelity to life as go into films founded on the greatest works of fiction. In most sex films and gangster stories there is so evident an artificiality, such poor limning of character and such tawdry sentiment that the characters are not characters at all, are even less than shadows, they are grotesque, while the motive is often purely a smear.

One of the happiest things about these better films is that the public supports them wholeheartedly. That being so it is no wonder that the producer sees to it that he cultivates this manifestation by theatregoers. It is but natural, and the fact that in the theatre or before the screen man wants a story, a plot which works to an end is the best proof that mankind is incurably moral. With all the shortcomings of the theatre-goer, the stage and screen are the best ways of testing the morality of the people. No one ever leaves a theatre where there has been a fair representation of life without satisfaction —the producers know that he requires the conquest of evil and the triumph of justice and right. Of course a tricky scenario writer and director may try to twist and betray the theatre patron's moral nature at times but he does it to his sorrow for sooner or later the film fan sees through the trickery and is not fooled again.

But in the films which treat of the greater stories, which have won universal acclaim because of their fidelity to life, there is no betrayal. The odd man in the theatre who might do a smart trick in the ordinary walks of life cheers the triumph of right in the theatre.

Then these great stories lift life out of the humdrum and show us how persons lived in other days and under other conditions, and so widen our sympathy.

Those who have fears for the motion pictures need not despair, for the movie though an art of itself, distinct from the theatre, has a place to fill as entertainer and as educator, it makes men forget their troubles and rejoice with those who are happy and sympathize with those who are in trouble.

The creation of a thousand forests is in one acorn.—Emerson.

8 FEWER KINDS OF BIRDS

Eight species of North American birds have become extinct in the past thirty-five years, evidently without being slaughtered by sportsmen. Nature has discarded some and no doubt civilization has been responsible for the loss of others.

Much more rapidly will pass some of the most plentiful species unless protection is found against elimination is taken. Even with the wisest human precautions and redemptive work, man cannot take the place of nature and it is very dangerous to a species to have it approach near what man may call the line beyond which it is not safe to go.

Some persons seem to have the notion that as long as a few of a species survive the species is safe. Nature shows that is not so. The upsetting of the adjustments of nature means death to a species.

The man who kills every single bird he can see brings nearer the disappearance of species which have developed by natural law in the course of millions of years. What's a dozen million of years in the deft handiwork and adjustments of nature as compared with the desires of man who wants everything in a few years and is willing to sacrifice from the face of the earth some of the most glorious evolutions of which nature has been capable.

Leave it to some persons and life would be a bald plateau with not a tree on it and not an animal or bird, nothing but selfish man existing the sort of existence, though he cannot create one single species to add to the millions which nature has created. Men can make robots but not robot ever comes to life. But man can aid nature and cause nature to produce new species as in flowers and animals but he cannot create. Darwin pointed out once the species is gone, because nature under a set of circumstances which can never be duplicated as they were a natural development, gradually developed the passenger pigeon.

U. S. POET PASSES

Edwin Arlington Robinson in his going was for a moment himself "the man against the sky," "a figure of a god going home unto his last desire," and now gone

Like one of those eternal remote things
That range across a man's imagings,
When a sure music fills him and he knows
What he may say thereafter to few men.

To the "thereafter" Robinson's sure music will continue to speak, but we could wish to know what fate of all in his immortal catalogue he found for himself beyond the crest. Does one go down "by comfortable altitudes" and find a promised land, "far-stretched and fair to see," such as would make the eyes of her who bore one "shine glad with hidden tears"? Or does one pass "indifferently down" with no care for what waited one's self or others anywhere to failure or to glory? Or does one see with "mechanic eyes" a world without a meaning, an "accidental heritage"? Whatever the road the poet may have taken—this man who stood on high and faced the sky—we treasure his l'envoi that, after time and place are overpassed, "God's fire may still keep one chord quivering" of the transcendent music which he heard and sang to his world.—New York Times.

SOUTH AFRICA'S LOYALTY

The loyalty of the South African Union to the Commonwealth of British Nations, a little more than thirty years after the conclusion of a long and bitter war, is one of the most striking spectacles in the development of the solidarity that exists in the great British family. When the Campbell-Bannerman Government passed the measure for the organization of the South African Union, granting it complete autonomy, many ardent imperialists expressed the fear that it would lead to the disruption of the Empire. On the contrary it inspired a loyalty to British connection that has challenged the attention and admiration of the whole world. Imperial Germany expected a revolt at the outbreak of the Great War in 1914, but was bitterly disappointed to find that the leaders of the Union at that time, Premier Sir Louis Botha and General Jan Christian Smuts, rallied to the support of Great Britain as did the other dominions. Since that time the Union has become firmly entrenched in the Commonwealth of British Nations.

Those who remember the long and bitter conflict that raged in South Africa at the close of the nineteenth century and extending to the twentieth, never imagined that such a complete vindication of British magnanimity toward a defeated foe would result as the loyalty demonstrated in the Great War and in the present celebration of the Silver Jubilee of His Majesty. It should give confidence to British people everywhere that democracy and parliamentary institutions as they exist in the British nations will survive the storms of the present political upheaval.—Brantford Expositor.

Those who place their affections at first on trifles find amusement, will find these become at last their most serious concerns.—Oliver Goldsmith.

A stray hair, by its continued irritation, may give more annoyance than a smart blow.—James Russell Lowell.

UPON THIS HOUSE

A mark is set upon this house which stands
With shutters broken and one faded door
Left open for the wind's impatient hands
To clutch and slam; to seize and slam once more
Through hours and days for lack of better toy.
But, though its portal thus unguarded waits,
Not caring whether sorrow come or joy,
The mark is there; the stranger hesitates
To brave the sullen aspect of the place.
Is it the spell of utter loneliness,
Is it the mockery of its one-time grace,
If it the threat its shadowy walls express
That makes men pass in haste and silently?
Upon this house, the mark of mystery!
—Aline Michaelis.

Gosh, what a vocabulary some folks has got!

FOUR BILLION DOLLARS to President Roosevelt is just small change. He purposes to put 3,500,000 idle citizens back at work and Congress has obligingly provided him with the money to pay the shot. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, greatest president the United States ever had, from a money standpoint at least, seems to have an idea that money was not made to eat but to spend. As the most magnificent spender of all time President Roosevelt takes the cake and all the trimmings.

A boy was sent by his loving parents, who had coddled him a good deal at home, to a big public school.

He had been strictly enjoined to write home regularly and tell them all about himself and his new life.

At the end of the week his first letter arrived. It consisted only of a single line:

"There are 370 boys here," he wrote. "I wish there were 369."

The dance ended, and the young man took his partner down to the supper-room. The girl seemed to have an extraordinary effect upon the waiter, who appeared incapable of taking his eyes off her. At last the young man could stand it no longer. "Look here, my man," he said to the waiter, "what makes you stare so rudely at this lady?" The waiter gave a gulp before replying. Then he said: "I ain't rude—only fine. It's genuine admiration. This is the fifth time she's been down to supper."

STIMULATING EFFECT GIVEN BY CHOCOLATE

End of Meal is Best Time to Eat Sweets

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The eating of chocolates to you may seem a very innocent pastime. But have you ever stopped to consider that chocolates give rise to a physical and mental reaction?

It is a noteworthy fact that when prohibition happened along, the men flocked to the candy stores. They didn't go there to buy for their wives or sweethearts. They went there to buy candy for themselves! And when prohibition ceased, candy sales dropped likewise.

Alcohol stimulates, of course, and it does chocolate. Chocolate, when burned in the body, gives the same reaction as does the oxidation of alcohol.

Swiss soldiers are given cakes of chocolate before going on the marches into the Alps. Mountain climbers everywhere recognize the vitalizing quality of sugar in any form.

Chocolate and bonbons oxidize quickly, produce energy, give heat to the body, serve as a decided and prompt up-building effect on the tissues.

By all crave stimulants at one time or another. With an habitual alcoholic, this craving is continued and insistent. Of course, when some chronic drinkers took to chocolates, they didn't get the kick they were after. Some, indeed, even now consume a pound of candy at one sitting.

If the oxidation of the sugar in chocolates and bonbons does not affect the higher brain centres sufficiently to cause definite intoxication, at least it produces an agreeable sense of warmth and well-being that is akin to it.

Among the ladies, we often come across a case of candy eater. They get as much fun out of a box of sweets as a boy does out of a stiff drink.

Chocolate does not make them drunk, but it gives a feeling of exhilaration and buoyancy which is identical with the first effects of alcoholic intoxication. Theoretically—if you could eat enough and your stomach would stand for it—you could actually get drunk on chocolates.

The habit of eating candy of all kinds after meals is a good thing. Sweets should not be eaten between meals, however. Just at the end of a meal, to top it off to the best time.

Chocolates have a definite food and nerve tonic value that should not be overlooked.

LIVINGSTONE LAID TO REST

Many Friends Attend Funeral of Popular Stirling Resident

Stirling — A large number of friends and relatives gathered to pay final tribute at the funeral of the late George Livingstone who passed away at his home on Monday, April 8, in his eighty-fourth year. Well known throughout the district, the deceased was remarkably active for his years until recently when illness overtook him, but all last Friday however he was able to be out and about the neighborhood when he suddenly became worse and failed to rally.

Left to mourn his loss beside his sorrowing wife, Elizabeth Livingstone, one son Alfred, of Stirling, and one grand daughter, Marion, also sister and George Livingstone, all of Rochester, N.Y.

The funeral service, conducted by Rev. R. W. Rowland, of Paul's United Church, took place at the home on Monday, April 8. The pallbearers were, Eight nephews, Thomas Montgomery Jr., Dennis Welch, Alex. Parks, Hiram DeRow, George Richardson. Floral tributes were received from Mr. and Mrs. Bagley and family of Peterboro, Mr. and Mrs. E. Munro and family of Stirling, and the Women's Association of St. Paul's Church, Stirling. Among those from a distance to be present at the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Wm. Mosley, Mrs. Gordon Tyrell and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tyrell of Peterboro, and Mrs. Gary and Mrs. J. Hanna of Moira, and Dr. Walter Elliott of Belleville.

St. Andrew's Young People's Guild

The regular meeting of St. Andrew's Guild was held in the Sunday School rooms on Monday evening, April 8. Mr. Howard Bailey presiding in the capacity of Chairman for the evening. The meeting was opened with a hymn and Rev. A. Kofford led in prayer. The secretary, Miss Marjorie Rose, then gave the report of the last regular meeting. During the business part of the meeting which followed, it was decided that the meeting for Easter Monday be postponed, and also that the date for the final meeting of the season be set for the last Monday of the month, April 29.

Miss Winnifred Ward then read the scripture lesson, and followed the singing of another hymn, Mrs. Jas Nolan gave an interesting reading entitled, "Behind the Death". The reading dealt with the story of heroic sacrifices made by a christian family in the strickened area during the Boer rebellion, when the entire family in the story were willing to suffer even death for the sake of their religion. The story was well given and very impressive. Mr. Art Duncan offered a sacred solo accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Kofford.

Miss Mae Johnson was then called on to present the topic for the evening, "Lessons for Believing that We Live Again". For thirty-five centuries man has believed in life hereafter, and that belief was largely responsible for the progress of civilization, stated Miss Johnson. Devotees to the cause of Christianity and paganism took upon it as a very pleasant thought, but not a single one of what is to be after life for these people when they try to discard it? In issues that are really admit that some great being is after all to be found that God created all things. Is it reasonable to believe that this same world would perish, that this universe, but it goes on being something. The atheist can't find a foundation for God as the creator of the universe and to accept God is a second unreasonable.

"This Easter season, when flowers and eggs and Easter lilies form a staple in new life, speaks a sincere and appropriate message of new life after death here on earth before our eyes, here among the wonderful things of nature? How can we believe that God would allow such wonderful things as these, but it does

ORIENTALS IN CANADA THEME OF ADDRESS

Mrs. A. A. Conlier is Speaker At Christ Church W. A. Meeting

"Behold these shall come from far, from the north and from the west. There shall be one fold and one shepherd" was the text from which Mrs. A. A. Coulter spoke at Christ Church W. A. yesterday on the Oriental in Canada. A short conception of seventy thousand Chinese and Japanese, five-sevenths are living in Vancouver. The foreign language and outlook of our country, and, in turn, the foreign living conditions present a difficulty. But, with a Christian attitude on our part and the Christian education on their part a satisfactory solution will be brought about.

Mrs. Coulter traced the Cantonese and pointed out that Chinese in Canada are now Canadian born. Of the twenty-three thousand Japanese in Canada, all but one thousand live in British Columbia.

Miss Athol Crozier sang with delightful enunciation Brahms' "Still wie die nacht." The monthly meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Bowyer, a former vice-president, Everett Street. The president opened with a responsive litany and the hymn "Lest We Forget, This Mercy Day." Mrs. Florence Cooke at the piano. The W. A. constitution and bylaws was read. Mrs. Addison Vandervoort was elected W. A. delegate for the May convention at St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, also Belleville United Church Conversation. Plans were made for future events.

The hymn "Unto the Least of Them" written by the late Miss Girdlestone who lectured here so successfully on the S. S. Van work in Saskatchewan was sung from manuscript. Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Johnson gave reports. Mrs. Coles, Shannonville, moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. Bowyer for opening her home so generously and serving tea to all the members.

MEAT COOKERY DEMONSTRATED

Mrs. E. R. McLean Lectures at Hydro Cooking Classes

Savoury odours of food in the baking tantalized the large audience at the second meat cook of the Hydro cooking classes, conducted yesterday afternoon by Mrs. E. R. McLean of Morloch, Ltd. A complete oven dinner was prepared before the lecturer and baked during the afternoon, after which a lucky woman in the audience took the whole dinner home with her.

Yesterday's demonstration was devoted to the preparation of meats, particularly, and Mrs. McLean had many valuable suggestions to impart on the main courses of the dinner hour. The dinner cooked included a roast of beef, and Mrs. McLean cautioned her hearers against putting salt directly on beef while cooking it. This toughens the beef. Salt should be placed on the fat which is pressed down into the centre of the roast, no other fat being needed in the pan. Salt does not toughen pork, however.

In a casserole placed moistened carrots and onions with a teaspoon of butter on the top, salt and pepper. Potatoes were placed on the rack for baking and the dessert for the meal was rice pudding made by using a half cup of rice, to which was added salt and about a pint of milk. This was baked without stirring for about two hours after dinner. For baking potatoes quickly, Mrs. McLean advised dropping them for fifteen minutes in water in a shovel before putting them in the oven.

Meat Dishes

A veal loaf was made by the demonstrator by using 1 pound of veal, 1-4 pound of salt pork, ground together, 2 cups of corn flakes, 1-4 cup of ketchup, 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 1 egg, 1 cup of milk, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 small onion, 1-2 cup celery. Sausages were chopped and celery leaves. This was mixed well together and placed in a greased tin, and covered with ketchup. Regarding dressings, Mrs. McLean said that sometimes instead of onion for flavouring, the addition of 1-2 cup of crushed and drained pineapple changed the taste altogether, and was delicious for chicken or other fowl.

Stuffed Pork Chops

Choosing pork chops about one and one quarter inches thick, slit them from end to end to form pockets. Mrs. McLean stuffed these with the following dressing: Two cups of mushrooms, diced, two tablespoons flour, one tablespoon water, one cup chopped onion, four tbsps. melted butter, four tablespoons of chili sauce or ketchup, the mixture being added to the melted butter and seasoned with thick white sauce. The meat was seared on both sides before stuffing. Toothpicks were used to fasten down the "pocket".

Pineapple Salad

A delectable looking salad was made by Mrs. McLean by using raspberry jelly, Half was set and when just cool it was beaten until pink then mixed with one half cup of strained and crushed pineapple and one quarter cup of crushed nuts. The rest of the jello was set in the mold and the pink mixture added. Pineapple and nuts were arranged as an interesting trimming for the salad, used in a ring around the plate.

Sausage Rolls,

A tea biscuit recipe was used for the basis of this dish. The dough was rolled quite thin and covered completely with sausage meat as thick as the dough. It was then rolled like a jelly roll, cut in slices about one and one half inches thick and placed in muffin tins for baking. This recipe used in making the biscuits was as follows:

3 cups flour, 1-2 cup shortening, 2 teaspoons Baking Powder, 1-2 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 cup sour milk.

The versatile tea biscuit recipe can be used in making a top for meat pies, dumplings, butter scotch rolls, etc. An interesting luncheon dish is made by pressing biscuit dough thinly to the inside of a mold placing cooked bacon or sausage meat in the bottom, breaking an egg in the centre of the mixture and steaming with a sprinkling of old cheese and a dash of paprika. This was baked in a hot oven.

Mr. Everett Smith gave a very practical talk on the advantages of electric cooking and asked the women to remember the slogan "Hydro is yours, use it". In any electric problems where advice of use Wm. H. is needed, the Hydro welcomed inquiries and would readily volunteer any information required. Mrs. Mitchell was on the part of the inquirer, Mr. Smith then gave the prizes and the accomplishments of the Hydro since purchased by the citizens of Belleville and in closing explained the features of the Commission Water Heater free installation. He again called the attention of the audience to the beautiful kitchen displayed on the stage and the wonderful sink, the first of its kind in the city, installed by Mr. Garn Dobbs.

The prizes of the afternoon were donated by Hydro and the winners were:—

White Lamp—Mrs. G. M. Sprague, 89 Gordon Street.

CARMEL W. M. S.

Mrs. J. B. Patterson was hostess to the Ladies of the M. M. S. on Wednesday, April 2nd. The meeting opened at 2.30 with the president, Mrs Patterson, in the chair. The meeting opened with a hymn and prayer by Mrs. Homan. The scripture lesson was given by Miss Jones from Psalm 68. Mrs. Norman read the devotional leaflet. Mrs. Simmons called the roll, eleven members responded and two visitors were present. Mrs. Pitman, Mrs. Homan and Mrs. Reid gave readings on the World Tower.

The sunshine bags were then handed in which amounted to $4.21.

Mrs. B. Pitman took charge of the following program. Hymn 61 was sung. Miss M. Jones favored with a reading, after which the 23rd Psalm was repeated. Mrs. B. Pitman gave the topic which was on the life of William Carey. Mrs. Pitman surely interested all present, explaining fully his life and character in his own words. Mrs. Chas. Brintnell gave some suggestions and side lights on the missionary meetings which she attended from the convention at Picton and which were much enjoyed.

A recitation was enjoyed from John Wootiens of Tyrone. Mrs. Simmons sang "There's a light on the Cross" and the meeting closed with prayer. Mrs. Pitman and her group members acted as hostesses at the lunch hour at which every one present enjoyed a social chat. $1.77 was received from the meeting. A very hearty vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Patterson for her kind hospitality.

MOIRA W. M. S.

The regular meeting of the W. M. S. was held at his home of Mrs. L. Vanderwater with a goodly number present, which was presided over by the president, Mrs. Geo. Foster. The meeting was opened with the 23rd, "Something for Thee", followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison.

Then a special Easter Service of Worship followed with hymns and responsive readings led by the president which were very impressive.

A reading on the "Circle of Friendship" was given by Mrs. L. Vanderwater.

This was followed by an excellent report of the W.M.S. Presbyterial held at Picton, January 24th and 25th, given by Miss Georgina Pitman of West Huntingdon Auxiliary who was the delegate to that Presbyterial. In the Bay of Quinte Presbyterial there are 27 auxiliaries and a decrease of $1048 was reported. An urgent need of support for the West is felt in all branches.

A letter from Miss Reddick, Presbyterial Supply Secretary, was read by Mrs. D. Thompson asking for a Consignment of clothing mitts be sent out by Sept. 1st. It was decided to purchase yarn and ask the Auxiliary members who can knit.

A thank offering was taken and two membership fees were paid in. Collection for the meeting was $6 cents.

Miss G. Pitman then sang very sweetly "Jesus is the World to Me." The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction.

A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Miss Pitman for her solo.

Lunch was served by the hostess and a social time was spent.

Rheumatism Made Him Give Up Job

Then Six Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills Completely Relieved Him

Ontario Man Recommends Dodd's to All Kidney Sufferers

Deerfield, Ont., April 11 (Special) —"I feel it my duty to tell others what Dodd's Kidney Pills to all those who are suffering as I did," writes Mr. W. R. Kilpatrick, a resident of this place. "When I was seventeen years old I went sailing in the lake style sailing vessels. I followed that occupation for nine years. Rheumatism got hold of the time I became afflicted with rheumatism in my right knee and I suffered for two years and then decided to give up the job. An old friend of mine told me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I felt better after taking the first boxes. In the end I had taken six boxes? I was completely relieved of the rheumatism. Whenever I feel any symptoms of a return of the trouble I take a few Dodd's Kidney Pills. I am now fifty-eight years old and can bend over and touch my toes, keeping my knees straight. Anyone suffering with Kidney trouble can make no mistake if they take Dodd's Kidney Pills."

MOTHER, CHILDREN STABBED TO DEATH

Philadelphia, April 11 (AP)— A mother and her three children were found stabbed to death in their home today by a neighbor and brother. Tony Demarco, 56, was found critically wounded and was rushed to a hospital.

The throats of all had been slashed. Police were other cuts about the bodies.

The dead were Mrs. Demarco, her daughters Ruth, 10, and Olga, 8, and her son Eddie, six. Police said there were nothing on the body Demarco had killed the others and then attempted suicide.

A grand entrance awaits the women this season. Black taffeta done in simple but distinctive lines. Such a model is one that has a simple bodice with tiny rhinestone buttons and short, very puffed sleeves. The simple skirt flares out from the knees to the hemline.

Children Place Parents on a Pedestal

By LISA GRENELLE

To a small child his parents are the world. Not only does he find no flaw in them, but it never occurs to him to look for any. Certainly they are completely wise. Certainly they can do no wrong. So, a child's first ambition is to be the exact facsimile of his parents.

The child, in the beginning, has no critical sense, as well as no sense of discrimination. Humbly he concentrates on the imitation alone. He imitates everything, everybody, impartially. And his chief and ever present examples are his parents. And no gestures of theirs is so small, no mannerism so absurd, no tone of voice so inharmonious that he fails to catch it and faithfully repeat it.

Will Find You Out

But sooner or later, your child will find you out. And if you set yourself up on high a pedestal in the beginning, the fall will be a hard one and the fall will be both.

But on the other hand, if from the beginning a parent makes no especial pretense at perfection he has little to dread on judgment day.

The relationship is less critical and as unforgiving as the child is completely trusting and docile.

Parents are the objects of reckoning and the age of defiance. The child gets over the parents' records in his heart and nothing can stop him. He considers by these records whether or not they are worthy, and nothing can alter his decision.

If they are not found worthy the child despises them entirely and they remain, but spiritually he goes elsewhere in search of wisdom, understanding, support. The parents have lost their influence.

Frank Parents

I do not believe in parents putting themselves on a pedestal before their children. I do not believe in them allowing their children to worship them too blindly at any time.

I do believe in parents saying frankly to their children, "I do not know," I believe in parents admitting to their children when they were wrong.

Then when the children are old enough to see their parents as they are, they will have suffered but though they may have their faults, they have never deceived them. They have never pretended to be what they were not, nor pretended to know what they did not know. They have proved that they are worthy of trust at least.

And as long as a child feels a sense of trust and trustworthy he will respect him, and never will withdraw from him entirely.

Softly creeping up the arm of a new navy blue wool dress is a band of soft grayish-blue fox; the fur forming a loose flange on the sleeve. This is all the trimming used for a suit that is typical of Spring. A navy blue, spatulated collar of the jacket continues in the fox band.

White shoulders gleam beneath the new chiffon capes. At Winter resorts evening wraps done in the evening wrap done in the form of a double chiffon cape that is furnished with a high collar and a deep flounce of chiffon.

A nice deception is that of the frock that looks just like a coat. Such a model is done in navy blue silk twill and has a small round collar of white piqué and a rounded white flower at the throat. The flower, like the white line that runs down the sides of the dress to look like a white frock under the blue coat, is also of piqué.

She forms a friendly relation between her hat and hair

By HELEN FOLLETT

Fitting the hat to the hairdress is every woman's job. The hat is the most important detail of dress, the right one can make a girl look topping, and the wrong one turn her into a caricature.

There must be a friendly relation ship between hat and coiffure, dress and hat won't play together. Remember last summer when long bobs were topped with little square or round turbans? They made the wearers look like Christopher Columbus and, to my way of thinking, he was nobody to look like.

Time, money and labor are expended upon the care and glorification of the feminine topknot, and things have taken a better investment. Coiffures have attained a high standard of chic, charm and becomingness.

To keep the hair in form, have beautifully shaped heads should be three permanent waves a year. Not that I was born that way, but that was before every girl was a curly-haired girl. Every 10 days or two weeks the shampoo and finger wave are on the beauty calendar. Then there are trims and scalp treatments, not to mention the home work which calls for a scalp friction every night and putting the finger wave to bed in a little cap so it will last a little longer.

Hairdressers are so varied that there's a becoming one for every face, fat or thin, young or old. This is a grand world for a woman.

LONG SKIING TRIP

Archangel, U.S.S.R., April 11 — (CP-Havas)—Five Russian skiers were resting here today after one of the most remarkable ski trips on record. They arrived here pushing their way from the Lake Baikal region, in Southern Siberia, after a trip of 63 days. They covered about 5,000 miles.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"Love In Bloom"
Love, Lyrics, Comedy
Make Happy Combination

George Burns and Gracie Allen, the screen's dizziest comedians, are at their comic best in Paramount's new "Love In Bloom", a picture which employs a poignant and delightful love story as foil to their irresistibly funny capers, and which is the feature attraction at the Belle today and Friday, matinee daily. Joe Morrison, Paramount's handsome young tenor, and Dixie Lee are featured in the romantic roles.

"Love in Bloom" is a story about goofy carnival folk. Dixie Lee runs away from her father's decrepit carnival before it falls apart and is struggling to get ahead in New York when she falls in love with a country boy, Joe Morrison, who is seeking fame as a music writer.

The carnival, in Dixie's absence, struggles along with Gracie Allen as the bulk soloist dancer and Burns, Dixie's brother, as the ticket seller and cashier. Meanwhile, when the sheriff finally arrests Dixie's father and the carnival is stranded, George and Gracie, Morrison, who is their honeymoon in the calliope, they go to New York to search for Dixie.

From that point on it is a race between the lovesick youngsters and their comic aids to try to get their hardest to make love's path rough. Finally, in Hollywood, Dixie, the boy and girl are happily wedded.

An ace musical score by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel features one song for Gracie Allen, who sings it "Love In Bloom" for the first time, and several for Joe Morrison, including the already popular "My Heart Is An Open Book."

J. C. Nugent, Richard Carle and Mary Foy are prominently cast in supporting comedy roles and director Elliott Nugent employed still and great comedy material in directing this happy and irresistible little film.

"I Am a Thief" Gripping

"I Am a Thief", said to be one of the most thrilling and baffling murder mystery dramas screened is announced as the second feature attraction on the same program.

The story by Ralph Block and Doris Malloy depicts the exciting battle between the French sureté and a band of international jewel robbers composed of impoverished nobles, lured adventurers and women so diabolically cunning they are able to steal millions in gems. Much of the action takes place on the famous Simplon Express, with its supreme building to which are the most astounding climaxes. There is an all star cast headed by Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez. Performances daily will commence at 2.30, 7.00, 9.00 o'clock.

"Love In Bloom" starts at 1.45, 5.15, 8.45 p.m. "I Am a Thief" starts at 3.45 and 8.30 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Destined"
A Stirring Drama of Modern Youth's Struggle in Life

Given their choice in the matter, most people would select a big 16-cylinder automobile in preference to a broken-down flivver. Fate was suspended to a nondescript model, it seems.

But when confronted with this same situation Dale Carter and Ted Brown show the lunch wagon because it meant a chance to make a living.

Dale Carter and Ted Brown are the leading characters in "Destined", now on the screen in the Capitol theatre, but they might be actual characters in real life. For this same situation has cropped up many times in the past few years.

Irene Cabot and Grace Bradley portray the roles of Brown and Carter's sweethearts in this stirring drama of the struggle of modern youth to establish itself in the maelstrom of life.

Cabot, the irresponsible son of a millionaire, is cut off without a penny, while Miss Bradley, an artist, is penniless because of circumstantial evidence that besmirches her office as the result of a murder at which she was present.

An accidental meeting brings them together and they frame a plot to get money from Dale's father, but, despite the knocks to which she has been subjected, Dale still clings to his ideals.

A hasty marriage follows and then comes the change in their lives. They are confronted with the prospect of having a delicate situation on their hands and starving, or trading it for the lunch wagon. They chose to stay, and fate and then follows the determined fight of youth to succeed along the straight and narrow path.

Jealousy

Nancy Carroll, in the role of the girl who causes most of the mischief, surpasses all her former portrayals in "Jealousy" which is shown as a companion feature on the Capitol bill. Her natural and vivacious personality lend a stirring charm to a film replete with action and drama.

In the leading role of the jealous Hamilton Griffin is a newcomer to the screen, who bids fair to rocket to stardom as a result of his performance in this film. His name is George Murphy, son of Mike Murphy, famous University of Pennsylvania coach, and a Broadway favorite in his own right. He appeared on Broadway with Ruth Chatterton in "Time I Sing" and "Shoot the Works."

Briefly, the film tells the story of a prize fighter who falls in with a jealous rage because of a suspicion that he has been made a dupe of his wife, the radiant Nancy Carroll The surprise climax is reached when Griffin is forced to say that it brings to a thrilling finish a series of the most gripping film plays seen in months.

The prize fight scenes have been handled with a realistic authenticness that is responsible for nerve-tingling moments of breathless suspense. The popular Lee Ramage, former world's champion, is Murphy's ring opponent in the fighting scenes.

Donald Cook is splendid as the 'other man." The balance of the cast does well in minor roles. Among them are Arthur Hohl, Raymond Walburn, Ines Gourtney, Allen Kearns and Clara Blandick.

Capitol News completes an exciting five double feature program.

Last complete show 8.50.

New York, April 11—(AP)—Metal and mining issues, buoyed by the United States government's boost of the domestic silver price to 77 cents an ounce, today gave the stock market a mild thrill.

In the early dealings some of the silver section jumped one to more than 4 points, but these were quick to take profits and most extreme gains were soon shaded or pared.

Sporting wheat prices at Chicago, based largely on the official estimate of a much lower crop, helped the grain market product first used more than 3 cents a bushel and corn was up over $1 a bale.

Motorists in advanced fractionally among Canadian shares, while Dome and International Nickel held about even. On the curb, Lake Shore and Hiram Walker were also narrow.

Dominion government bonds ruled steady, with Victory issues, unchanged at 99 5-8 cents.

Shares of U.S. Smelting moved between 1 and 2 points higher. American Smelting, Howe Sound, Cerro De Pasco, International Nickel and Kennecott were fractionally to a point better. In the other divisions, Amerada advanced a point and small gains were registered by Case, Johns-Manville, Sears Roebuck, Seaboard Oil, United Carbon and N. Y. Central.

PLANT EXTENSION IS CONTEMPLATED

Belleville Foundries Find Quarters to Small to Handle Business

Belleville Foundries, Limited, one of the city's newest industries which started operating here but a few months ago will undergo considerable expansion of the plant on Station Street, it was announced today by manager Fred Hindle.

Plans call for a new wing extension of the building to the rear some fifty feet. With the completion of the new apartments will be added to the present various positions of the plant to the enlargement of the pay roll, at present listing some thirty-five employees.

A consistent increase in business since the first official opening was reported by Mr. Hindle today, "We are confident of the future and predict better business conditions from here on. By the present the amount of work, that we have been given since opening up has almost doubled our capacity and we are well satisfied," added the manager.

At the present time the chief work of the plant is the foundry casting and repairs, repairs to farm and agricultural machinery and the making of steel range and troughs. A complete retinning plant has been added. During the past winter a full force of workers has been employed, with the chief work being the construction of large snow plows for government use.

Conflagration of Great Proportions Sweeps Business Section

Peterborough, Ont., April 11 — (CP)—Threatening the entire business section of the village of Norwood, a fire of serious proportions was engaging the attention many of the community this afternoon. The fire originated in the garage of Charles F. Pearce, on Peterborough Street, from some unknown cause. A strong east wind spread the flames rapidly.

The garage and red brick house have already been destroyed.

The flames swept west onto the next block, demolishing outbuildings and gaining hold on two residences on that street.

In addition to the entire adult population of the village who are fighting the flames it was reported the students of the high school were working hard to prevent the possibility of the school taking fire.

The fire had already gained some ground in the school property and outbuildings were set with wet hooks and other improvised articles for fighting the flames.

At two o'clock Mayor Roland Denne ordered a squad of Peterborough firemen and the fire engine but it was expected it will take the equipment an hour to cover the 20-mile stretch of rough road.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

CHAPTER FORTY-THREE

Riding its tale of pitiless murder right on the edge of the desert, that fateful words scared the way Dick's conscience. Below him, stark and sinister, the story lay — the imprint of Slade's fallen body by the corral, the long, tortured path leading to Cameron's ranch house and those footprints of a horse galloping westward.

Dick's mouth had become straight hard line, and at sight of his eyes Barnes started back. The picture of an unmistakable resolve was blazing there, and even as he looked Barnes realized that the border country could hold those two implacable enemies no longer—the darkened, the inevitable clash was close at hand.

At last Lowell broke the long, brooding silence. "One more score to settle, and this time, the end." In his voice held the grim finality of death itself.

Again his eyes, dark with sorrow, fell to the outstretched form between them. "He was my friend," the low voice went on. "And because he was my friend Slade shot him down like a mad dog. Nothing I can do will bring Stub back, but before another day passes he'll get his answers to me."

Gently Barnes laid a restraining arm about Dick's shoulder. "Careful!, he warned. "We can't play into Slade's hands. It may be the very thing he wants to drive you to. Were pin him on the range. Let's not spoil it all. The law—"

"The law!" Dick flung the word savagely back. "It is justice I want, not law. What can the law do but avenge a penniless, unknown man against the bribery and threats of Slade? But after I've done what's written can keep me from him now. This time, it's myself who is the law."

Stooping, he raised the limp body in his arms and carried it into the house where silently Barnes followed, his own mind at work on the giving. He heard Lowell phoning for Doctor Price from the inner room, and after a moment Dick joined him, all sorrow, all feeling were banished from his face. Never more he had become the stern-visaged leader making his first foe his last attack.

"Price is out of town," Lowell said briefly. "I'm going to round up all the men from your ranch and mine. I must have at least twenty every member of the Guardians, every man rifle and pistol we've got. Bring them here."

"What are you going to do, Dick?"

"Lead them to the dam and give Sark's gunmen the choice of leaving—this country—or fighting it out. If this is war, let it be war. The time to strike is now, before they can gather fresh support."

For a moment Barnes stood irresolute. "You're right," he agreed at last. "It may be our best chance."

Running down the slope, he soon mounted, then wheeled his horse back to the ranch house. "What about Sarl himself?"

With cold finality the tall, stern figure answered, "I deal with him alone."

But at that very moment the man of whom they spoke had already reached Yuma.

Halting his panting horse directly before the entrance to the U. S. Irrigation Company, Sarl entered and carefully locked the door behind him. From the safe he drew out a roll of bills and thrust them into his pocket, then laying a pile of documents before him, sorted them carefully, as if at last the weary, prosier part int the little fireplace and touched a match to them. Silently he watched the rustling flames eating their way among the scatter-ed papers, and smiled. Very slowly with his foot, to make certain that nothing remained, but blackened ashes. Satisfied, he returned to his chair, sitting for a time he sat with his arms outstretched, heavy eyes gazing at the wall while his long fingers tapped reflectively on the smooth surface of the desk. At last he sighed, and taking from the safe a small vial, he left the office.

Without a glance at his jaded horse, still standing beside the curb, Sarl walked across the street to the garage where his car was kept, and driving rapidly out of town, stopped just at the outskirts of Verde, where the town's only hospital stood in a grove of shady eucalyptus.

A young nurse in white uniform met him at the door, and recognizing him at once, started, then after a second's hesitation, asked him to enter.

Smiling, he thanked her. No visitors remained of the fury that a few short hours ago had so distorted his dark face, and now it was the old, suave, genial Sarl who spoke.

"I wanted to run over and learn how my friend Pablo is doing. The reports from some of the boys have not been reassuring."

She shook her head. "He is still a very sick man, Mr. Sarl. Last night I thought we'd lost him, but soon enough to give us real encouragement."

"I'll been wondering," he said reflectively, "whether the ranchers were annoying him in any way."

"No one has been allowed in his room except Doctor Price."

"Price!" Sarl frowned. "Is Price attending Pablo?"

"There is no better physician in Verde," she said.

"Yes, of course. Then, after a brief pause, "Is Pablo still delirious?"

"At times. This morning he was conscious. But he seems to be in constant fear. Something is weighing on his mind. He told me yesterday he had got out of bed coming to him."

"Poor old chap." There was both sympathy and concern in the man's voice. "May I see him in his room, and after a moment Dick joined him, all sorrow, all feeling were banished from his face. Never more he had become the stern-visaged leader making his first foe his last attack.

"Price is out of town," Lowell said briefly. "I'm going to round up all the men from your ranch and mine. I must have at least twenty member of the Guardians, every man rifle and pistol we've got. Bring them here."

Our King and Queen on their Silver Jubilee

When the Prince of Wales became the King's ambassador.

IN the years following the war, when the royal family took such an active interest in the affairs of the Empire, the Prince of Wales, heir to the throne, became the King's personal ambassador.

Not even King George himself had, when he was Prince of Wales, travelled farther, or more often, than the popular young Prince.

It was the war that served to show what sort of man this Prince was. He had visited just about every tradition in joining regiments in the front lines, showing a particular preference for Canadians. Often he travelled about as an ordinary officer and once was summarily ordered by a superior officer who failed to recognize him as the Prince of Wales, to jump into a car and drive him, over dangerous roads, to headquarters. The officer got quite a shock when he realized he had a royal chauffeur.

After the war, in 1919, Prince visited Canada where he was enthusiastically acclaimed by one and all. It was on this occasion that he started his ranch, the "E.P." ranch in Alberta, declaring at the time that he was going to make it pay.

From Canada, the Prince went to the United States where that nation hailed him as the world's most popular prince and they still hold to that opinion.

From United States, back to England, then on to Australia and New Zealand, India, South Africa —every quarter of the globe.

No Prince in history so endeared himself in the hearts of nations as did this most democratic of princes.

Our layout to-day shows three informal portraits of this thin, nervous, but very much alive heir to the throne. He is seen at the age of 40, dressed in the "sailor costume. The sea again! Another picture shows him aboard ship on his eastern trip, dressed in the costume of a Chinese coolie at a masquerade. In the centre, an intimate study taken in Washington in 1919 on the occasion of his first visit to the United States.

Everywhere he went he carried with him a message from the King to his subjects.

And everywhere he was the subject of great rejoicing—much to his own discomfort at times.

On his Canadian visit, so many handshakes in Ottawa caused an injury to that member that prevented any further shaking. Then in Toronto, war veterans crowded around him in such a mass that they had to pass him over their heads to get him to the speaker's platform.

step in ending this rebellion Dick has stirred up against me. So I had Price meet me on the train at Salton Tanks and over the Lowells' I told you once we are not fit to bring happiness to any woman, we Lowells. Witness how this renegade son of mine bears out my words."

Dark anger smouldered in his sunken eyes, yet no one, not even Nora, could guess the bitter disappointment that lay silent and well guarded within the man. Slowly he repeated, "Take me to her."

A little reluctantly she threw the car into gear, and again starting in the town, drove down the dusty road into the Mexican Quarter, stopping at last before the shabby, well kept garden where Lolita lived.

There among the early flowers a child was playing, and looking up at the two men stepping from the car, he smiled in eager welcome, and rising to his feet, ran unceremonially toward them.

Questioningly Lowell's eyes raised to Nora's and in mute answer she nodded, her own eyes wet. Then clumsily, but with curious tenderness, Solon Lowell knelt down and raised the boy in his arms. His voice trembled.

"Poor little devil," Nora heard his murmured words, and through a mist of tears she saw the old man stoop and lay a wrinkled cheek against the dark, soft face of the child, in whose veins ran the same blood as his own.

Tightly, hurriedly, he clasped his face to see a girl standing there. At sight of him she stumbled, half afraid, and still holding the child in his arms, Lowell turned toward her.

"I have come to see you and talk to you," he said gently. "I am Solon Lowell."

With quick, instinctive fear, she made a step forward, as if to snatch the child fiefn his arms.

But reading that unspoken apprehension in her face, he added, "Do not be afraid. I have come to help you if I can. Tell me, Who is your father?"

"El." Very low, the voice replied in the liquid tones of the border. "The man hesitated. "And his father is—my son?"

"No Nora was as if an eternity had passed before the girl answered. Its dull anguish she felt her nails cutting into the palms of her hands, then once more the voice had enough to be audible, Lolita answered. "Sí."

Heartbrokenly Nora turned aside. She wanted to be gone, to be alone. It was as if in that deepening moment the very desert had become hateful with all its floor of thorn-bearing, life-long memories that she wanted to blot out but could not. Melodious she stood, her eyes fixed on the ground, not daring to look at them, no longer able to endure the deep, understanding sympathy in the old man's gaze. And once again, as if from very far away she heard his voice.

"You love Dick, Lolita?"

For a moment the girl stood, perplexed, then rapidly shaking her head answered, "But it was not Dick, Senor. It was Bruce. Oh, I thought he loved me. I thought—"

"Bruce!" Amazement and a dawning understanding mingled in the man's voice.

"But surely, Look." On a thin chain she drew a small gold locket from beneath the loose blouse she wore, opening it, she showed Nora the half, it glistening in the sunlight.

"Three years ago, Senor, we were married in the church in Mexico. He did not dare that you should know, fearing that in your anger you might separate us. So it was to be always between us until he should be able to make his own way in the world. And then—" The voice drop-ped, "I was to be his wife."

"And Dick? Did he know?" Lowell asked.

"Si mas tarde. Later Bruce told him. And ever since that night they have been—" She hesitated, then decided—your Dick has helped me very much. I am grateful. Only the good God knows. Without him life would have been hard."

She might have said more, but impulsively Nora threw both arms around her and kissed her, then to Lowell she pleaded in a voice tremulous with emotion, "Please, you're not angry, Uncle Solon. Tell him."

The old man's eyes were strangely soft. "Angry?" He smiled. "I am very proud, and very happy in this my grandson."

Slowly, almost reluctantly he gave the child back to its mother.

"I go now," he told her in a voice not yet grown steady, "But soon I shall come back to talk again, and for this child's future or your own, have no fear. You can look to me as your friend always."

Beckoning to Nora, he turned away.

Too happy to speak, she jumped to the wheel of the car. Within that moment the weight of pain that had lain upon her, heart for many days was lifted, and for the first time that she could remember the sunlit world about her spoke of happiness and a fair day.

But Lowell's eyes were sombre still. Perplexed great lay they.

"They dared not tell me—neither Dick or Bruce," he murmured. "Yes, that was right. I have been too hard, Nora, too hard. I have inspired fear—never love—even in those two who should have been closest to me of all the world."

Beside him the soft voice answered. "It is not too late. Bruce—"

"It must not be too late. Bruce's life I blighted, and almost Dick's. Nora, I have been a failure." Again his eyes passed to where, in the garden, Lolita stood like some youthful madonna of the desert, with the child in her arms. "Amends to those two children I must make."

Reluctant to go, he lingered before that peaceful picture, then the sound of a car approaching from down the road toward Verde caused him to look up. Rapidly the car neared, and as it drew beside them the solitary driver threw on the brakes and stopped. There Sarl and his understanding mingled in the man's voice.

"But surely, Look." On a thin chain she drew a small gold locket from beneath the loose blouse she wore, opening it, she showed Nora the half, it glistening in the sunlight.

"Three years ago, Senor, we were married in the church in Mexico. He did not dare that you should know, fearing that in your anger you might separate us. GEO. SELKIRK MAKING GOOD
Filling Position in Right Field For Yankees Satisfactory

NEW YORK, April 11.—(CP)—Balmy breezes wafting up from the Southland carry the word that George Selkirk, hitter of baseballs from Huntsville, Ont., is firmly entrenched in Babe Ruth's former baseball post with New York Yankees.

The bat-work of the towering Canadian has played a prominent part in giving the de-Ruthed New Yorkers a spring training tally that reads today: 16 games won; six lost. Pieters of fact, the youth in addition is admittedly a better fielder than the venerable Bambino.

Selkirk has played in 19 of the games gone through the South and he is living up to the .330 hitting average Manager Joe McCarthy hopefully predicted for him. In 75 times at bat he collected 24 safeties a total of them homers—which Ruth cures out to .320 exactly.

The track work regularly did at High School has paid him dividends on the bases and in the field. Because of his speed he carries the sobriquet of "winklelores".

He runs almost as fast backward as he does forward, highly important to a ball-hawk in the garden. He has a somewhat awkward catching style, and his fellow fielders are possibly suffering a heart strain watching the way the big fellow goes to get them, he has been getting results with few bobbles.

Piles Go Quick
Under Dr. Leonhardt's Internal Method

Large numbers of sufferers from itching, bleeding or protruding piles have learned that quick and lasting relief can be accomplished with an internal medicine, when salves do not help and wish is to escape operation.

Bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel causes piles. The veins are flabby, the bowel walls weak—the parts inflame. To end Piles an internal medicine should be used to stimulate the circulation and help to heal the affected parts.

Dr. Leonhardt was one of the first to discover a real Internal Pile remedy. He called his prescription HEM-ROID and prescribed it for thousands of patients with a fine record of success and then developed it. Every Pile sufferer should be able to get HEMROID tablets from their own druggist, with money-back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives.

So isn't it wise when other ways fail to go to J. S. McKeown, who says so. No matter what kind of Piles you have, one bottle of HEM-ROID tablets must show you the safe, sure way to get rid of your Pile misery or money-back.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Upon arising in the morning, the system is at its lowest ebb. For this reason food is required and a light breakfast should be taken, even if real hunger is absent. The body needs heat and energy in the morning. The custom of many persons of eliminating breakfast is to be deplored.

"Al" Walters Will Head the Tennis Club

"Al" Walters of this city was the unanimous choice of local tennis enthusiasts at their annual meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. last night and was elected to the office of President of the Bay of Quinte Tennis Club. One of the largest pre-season meetings of tennis players was on hand to voice their approval in relationship to the executive appointment and continuation of lawn tennis as a club in the city. The meeting being well attended by both lady and gentlemen members of past years.

Secretary William Hurst occupied the chair during the absence of the officials who submitted the treasurer's report, that showed a bank balance from the past year. This report, presented out by Mr. Hurst, showed that the club did not conduct its activities until along in July 1934, but with such a bright future in store for them, a banner season could be looked for in 1935. Robt. Martin, representing the Bay of Quinte Country Club, informed the gathering that a nominal rental fee of $10.00 per season would be charged the tennis section, giving them full privileges of the club with the exception of the golf course.

Considerable discussion followed in relationship to the renovating of the courts at the Bay of Quinte Country Club with the result that they decided to completely overhaul the courts and replace nets, etc., with new material, where needed. The annual membership fee for all in the Tennis Club was set at $5.00 per year, including juniors, ladies and seniors. Work on the courts will commence at once in order that the players may get on the courts before the first of May. The club's initial club tournaments will be held on May 24th. Other seasonal social affairs will follow. A drive for a larger membership started with enthusiasm last night.

The matter of affiliation with the Ontario Tennis Associations was left in abeyance until the next regular meeting of the club. The election of officers for the Bay of Quinte Tennis Club for 1935 resulted as follows: President Al Walters; Secretary-Treasurer, William Hurst. Conveners and captains will be named later.

OLYMPICS NOW ONE GAME UP

Defeat Vancouver in Little World Series in Overtime

Vancouver, April 11 (CP)—Detroit Olympics of the International Hockey League were one game up today on Vancouver Lions of the Northwestern League in their five-game "Little World Series" here.

Getting two goals in overtime, Olympics ended a 3-3 deadlock and won the third game 5-3 here last night. Lions won the opener 2-1 and Detroit took the second 4-2. The fourth game will be played here Friday night.

Orville Rondeau put Olympics ahead with the only goal of the first period, when he went down left wing alone and passed when Wally Kilrea slipped him the rebound.

Clint Smith knotted the count less than two minutes after the second session on a mate effort, late in the period passed to Bryan Hextall who put Detroit ahead. A half minute later Eddy Wiseman drilled the puck past Johnny Ciarka.

Hank Duck gave Lions a shorthived lead again on a pass from Tiny Thompson but Tom Mackell and Kilrea combined late in the session to tie the count. Mackell taking the pass and the game into overtime.

Earl Roche counted the winning marker after four minutes of overtime, when he tore in fast on Ciarka's rebound and whipped a wrist-high shot from left wing. Referee Lionel Conacher, T. Brown, J. E. Shortt, E. McMurray and M. R. Morden.

For the information of managers and captains of teams we would point out that each team may dress up fifteen players, ages as follows: Juniors, 19 years and under May 1st, Midget, 16 years and under May 1st, Juvenile, 19 years and under May 1st. No player will be signed up after May 31 and team managers are asked to have their entries in the hands of the secretary by April 30th in order that schedules may be drawn and the game commence by May 1st.

In several years past, a little carelessness has been shown by some of the team managers in not checking up close enough on the ages of their players. In every case the teams have lost out when it was proven that players were over age. Make sure, managers of teams, players meet the age requirements and so save yourself plenty of trouble and disappointment.

SHORT HOLD BEST

If you had to keep yourself from falling 100 feet to the ground by holding onto a rope where would you prefer to grasp the rope, at the very end or up toward the top."

The answer is obvious. Holding at the end minimizes your chances of saving your life. The same applies to golf as a good club.

You have everything to lose by grasping the end of the shaft. When you keep your left little finger down at least two or three inches from the top of the grip you have a good number of advantages. The shorter hold enables you to have better control over the club. Your left hand will function better and your left thumb much easier to get the necessary wrist action.

The short hold means better shots in the long run.

Wolverines Even Series With Montreal Royals Winning 4-2

Halifax Team Scores Three Goals Before Reply by Losers

By George C. Murray,
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Halifax, April 11—(CP)—Jack Caulo blasting the Montreal Royals at their own game to take a 4-2 victory in the third battle of the Eastern Canadian Amateur Hockey Championship series.

Abandoning the in-defensive style of play copied from the once mighty Montreal Maroons, the Halifax pack went right in after the invaders last night and put three bombs into the Royal fortress before the hard-pressed Royals could get started.

Victory put the Connmen on an even footing with the outfit coached by youthful Don Pennison and they'll renew encounter scheduled for Friday night, the winners meeting Port Arthur Bearcats in the first game of the Allan Cup finals Monday.

Swooping down on the Royals the Maritime champions scored hot ones as Patsy Seguin until Ernie Mosher beat him for the first counter at the six-minute mark.

A minute after the second period opened, when Halifax was one man short, Lawlor trapped the Royals on a zag play and whipped Seguin with a backhand shot.

Royals were still scoreless when Owen Lennon sloshed down from his own territory, split the Montreal defence and scorched the third Halifax counter.

Two smart Royal line of snipers, Pat Farquharson, Neville and Sr. German, finally got going on a bitter attack, which ended with Farquharson flipping in the rebound of Neville's backhand shot. But the cheering had hardly died away before Hudson made it 4-1 for Halifax.

Davy Neville's habit of being on the job gave Royals another goal in the third, when the Montreelers made a stacking Wolverines relentlessly.

If satisfactory arrangements can be made Promoter Clem Allen will stage four of the Silver Glove wiinners from Toronto to Belleville for his next boxing show, early next month. Promoter Allen was "tickled pink" with the results of his Tuesday night's Golden Gloves boxing tournament and feels that by bringing together the better class boxers of this district versus the district Silver Gloves winners of Toronto a much larger house can be looked for when the weather turns warmer. If such a set-up materializes each local district winners as Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler, Bill Crawford, "Kid" Vieau, "Shorty" Fisher, Gordie Morris, Bob Vieau and Ted Hall would make formidable opponents for district winners from other parts of the province. Promoter Allen is going to Toronto next week to open negotiations with the Queen City stable owners for such a card, he says.

Taking into consideration, that 14 bouts were staged by the S.W.A.A.C. on Tuesday night and all were drawn for out of the hat, a pretty good card resulted. Naturally there was bound to be the odd one or two mis-matched bouts as would be the case when the fighters of various clubs are drawn into the ring and in the pull out of the hat system, but generally speaking the entire card was worthy of comment and left the cash customers quite pleased with the bouts. Yes, or three loud-mouthed fans were heard shouting disapproval at practically every bout and shouting for action, who told you you could fight", etc., but upon investigating it was found, that these self-same hecklers had either checked their way into the show or gained admittance through passes. It is usually found, that the real sports are not the ones that are always looking for hits and others' efforts that the Recreation Club enjoyed a very good session. The tennis players felt that "Al" would naturally lead them points. In the absence of the regular meeting voted to completely reorganize and as the Canoe Club and put them into executive having candidates. Judging from the interest and enthusiasm shown last night, tennis is in for a banner year in Belleville. This club will commence activities as soon as the weather is generally affiliate with the Central Ontario Tennis Association.

Despite Loss of Limbs and Deformities Many Carry on In Their Favorite Sport

(By the Canadian Press)

Battling against odds in his game of life, disabled athletes have carried a prominent role in the annals of Ontario sport. Despite loss of limb or deformities. They continue the game they enjoyed, when physically fit. Some of them have gladdened among the ranks of sport.

The old days are recalled when Jack Dempsey, Manitoba boxer, stationed. Minus his left arm, Dan starred on the baseball mound with the Chicago Cubs and Boston Red Sox. Hall is among the immortals of the baseball world, minds of sportsmen of that city and is known throughout the Dominion, having four playoff semi-professional baseball Quebec and Western Canada.

Quiet, unassuming Sergeant McKillop, 19-year-old Windsor lad is a fine example of sporting gameness. Despite the loss of a leg, he participates in basketball, baseball and tennis. He says tennis "keeps him hopping" but he proves a hard opponent for the average sportsman.

Little Jimmy Barber, 12-year-old Stratford boy, was born with one arm deformed but the lad has mastered it fair and through determination is ranked among the best players on the Hamlet School hockey team. In fact, he has skill in his normal arm and is a hard player or also.

Thorold fans thrilled last year at the goal-tending of William Speck man to pass in his defence position.

Proposal is Made To Except Companies

Ottawa, April 11 (CP)—Any additional burden that would be placed on Life Insurance Companies would be an added burden on policy holders, D. E. Kilgour, Toronto, today told the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee in urging maintenance of Life Insurances and Trust Companies as an excepted class in the Dominion Employment and Social Insurance Bill.

Unemployment in these classes in Canada was very much less than in Great Britain where they were excepted from the British scheme, Mr. Kilgour said.

The annual meeting of the Belleville Softball League took place at the town Rotarians' club luncheon on Tuesday. As in years past the Ki-Y League is willing to sponsor all minor softball and baseball including Bantam, Midget, Juvenile and possibly Junior. An invitation for team managers to submit their entries has been announced and Ralph Meeker, physical instructor at the Y.M.C.A. has been named as secretary and into whose hands all entries for affiliation must be presented. Each team is allowed to sign 15 players, May 1st being named as the date to determine all age limits. The various age limits for the groups are — Bantam 15 years and under, midget 16 years and under, Juvenile under 19 years and Junior under 21. A fee has been set at the deadline for club entries while no players may be signed after May 31st. Local minor league softball league desirous of affiliating with the Ki-Y League should enter their clubs as soon as possible as the league schedules will be drawn as soon as enough clubs have been entered.

Commenting on the recent affiliation of the local Aajmas Club to the Canadian Canoe Association, the Peterboro sport scribe speaks favorably of the subject and intimates, that canoe racing, or paddling should be introduced in the Lift Lock city. It is understood that a beautiful canoe club has been operated in Peterboro in years past for pleasure paddling only and it is the hope of the Peterboro scribe that this organization will sponsor canoe racing along with the Aajmas Club to eventually see the realization of a Central Ontario Canoe Association. The matter is being taken up by the local club with the Northern Division next week, we hear.

The stage is all set for the city basketball championship final game between the Deanes and the "Y" squad at the Collegiate gym on Friday night. Prior to this championship tilt the two Collegiate teams will battle it out for the city school cage title, but naturally the night-cap affair is attracting the attention of the local basketball fans.

The local lawn tennis enthusiasts convened at the "Y" last night regarding the players more interest in years. Both lady and gentlemen players were on hand for the first Al Walters as the president of the Bay of Quinte Tennis Club for 1935, Mr. Walters held a responsible position with the local Rathbun firm. His sports are golf, hits and others' efforts that the Recreation Club enjoyed a very good session. The tennis players felt that "Al" would naturally lead them points. In the absence of the regular meeting voted to completely reorganize and as the Canoe Club and put them into executive having candidates. Judging from the interest and enthusiasm shown last night, tennis is in for a banner year in Belleville. This club will commence activities as soon as the weather is generally affiliate with the Central Ontario Tennis Association.

GRANDMOTHERS HONORED BY W.I.

Eldorado Branch Holds Special Programme, Prizes Awarded

Eldorado—The regular monthly meeting of the Bannockburn and district Women's Institute was held in Eldorado Women's Institute hall on Tuesday evening, March 21 at the home of Mrs. Albert Harvey, with an unusually large attendance of over fifty-eight including visitors.

Mrs. Ed. Blakely presided in the absence of the president, Mrs. Jas. Bailey, and opened the meeting with singing, after which the minutes of the last meeting was read by Mrs. H. Pernell and adopted. Letters of appreciation were read from those receiving boxes of fruit and dainties while sick. The roll call was answered with Garden Hints.

The program was then handed over to the program committee for this meeting and it being Grandmother's Meeting, items all centred around the theme of pioneer days.

There were eight grandmothers present, and they were all given seats of honor during the programme. The first item was community singing of old time songs, after which Mrs. F. J. Nickle, in her usual gracious manner, extended a hearty welcome to the grandmothers. Mrs. Wm. Andrews gave a splendid reading entitled, "Our Grandmothers". A piano" instrumental was rendered by Mrs. A. Empey and was much enjoyed. A poem, "Old Mother" was given by Miss Annie Holmes. Mrs. Albert Harvey delighted with a solo, "The Cradle and the Music Box". Two readings, "Pioneer Mothers Speaks" and "Toast to Pioneer Women" were well given by Mrs. F. J. Nickle while Mrs. H. Parnell accompanied her on the piano. A solo, "Till we meet again" was given by Mrs. Wm. McEwen, and a reading "Social Life-fifty years ago", was read by Mrs. A. Harvey, which caused much merriment.

A presentation of a lovely bouquet of roses to the oldest grandmother, Mrs. Sandford, and a glass cake dish to the grandmother who had the largest number of grand children went to Mrs. Joseph Chambers, who has 11 grandchildren and four great grandchildren. All then joined heartily in singing, "Oh, they are jolly good fellows". This was followed with a Grandmother's Contest, which proved very interesting. The meeting was brought to a close by all singing the National Anthem, after which lunch was served by our hostess and assistants, and a very happy social half-hour was spent.

W. M. S.

On Wednesday afternoon, March 3rd, the ladies of Eldorado and Union W.M.S. gathered at the home of Miss Annie Holmes for their April meeting. There were eighteen ladies including Mrs. and Mrs. Albert Harvey, our president, opened the meeting with the singing of Doxology and Lord's Prayer in unison; a hymn was also sung. The Bible lesson was read responsively. Prayer was offered by Mrs. A. Empey for our Ministerial; Miss A. Holmes for "Temperance", and Mrs. C. McCann for Our Mission Bands. The minutes of the last meeting were read by Mrs. L. Robinson and the treasurer's report was given by Mrs. Geo. Robinson. These reports were accepted; the roll call was answered with an Easter Bible verse; Mrs. George Robinson, group leader for this month, then took charge and had a splendid Easter program, including a solo, "Hail Dawn Immortal", by Mrs. Harvey, and the Devotional leaflet, "Ye are My friends" was read by Mrs. Nickle. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. G. Fletcher. Mrs. Harry Parnell gave a very vivid and helpful report of the Presbyterial convention at Alton at which she was a Delegate. Mrs. A. Empey and Mrs. A. Harvey also gave some items of interest heard while attending the same convention. The meeting closed with prayer by Rev. W. G Fletcher.

Lunch was served and a social half-hour enjoyed.

T. F. S.

The regular meeting of the Eldorado and Union Young People's Society was held on Wednesday evening, March 3rd, in the Eldorado Orange Hall. Mr. Vernon Stobbe opened the meeting by singing hymn, "Abide with Me". The minutes of the last meeting were read by Florence Walker; the roll call showed about thirty-five in attendance. It was decided not to have the play come from Trenton East as previously planned. A one act play, "Mrs. Bishop's Candle Stick" under the able leadership of Miss Annie Thorpe, was then presented, the characters being Messrs. Cecil Robinson, Vernon Stobbe, Rev. W. G. Fletcher, Gerald Blackburn, Gordon Pigden and Don. Pool; also Misses Gladys Masters and Margaret Wright. The play was much enjoyed.

ANYTIME IS TEA TIME

let's have a cup of Tea

Every one is interested in the country's improvement. We will have found economic recovery only when every one does his share.

As we see it our duty is threefold: first to provide the farmer with a fair market for his crop; second to give employment to as many people as possible; and finally to supply a wholesome food at a low cost.

When we introduced the original Corn Flakes nearly thirty years ago they were spontaneously received. They were crisp and tasted good and they were ready to serve. Year by year we enlarged our factories, hired more workers, bought more premium corn from the farmers, adopted a 24-hour working day with shorter shifts, enabling us to give employment to twenty-five per cent more people at good pay than in pre-depression times.

Kellogg's Corn Flakes are enjoyed daily by millions of people — far more than any other ready-to-eat cereal on the market. We appreciate your preference and will try constantly to give you a better product at greater value. Today you get twice as much in Kellogg's at one-half the price you paid for Corn Flakes before the war, 1908 to 1914.

Meanwhile both package and product have been steadily improved. Special processes — exclusively our own — keep Kellogg's Corn Flakes oven-fresh and flavor-perfect right to your table. You can buy them at grocers anywhere with full confidence in their guaranteed purity and quality.

We make only one brand of Corn Flakes — Kellogg's — in the red-and-green package.

Platonic Friendship

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

As the pretty little stenographer from the accounting department passed the photo studio on her way out to the elevator she stopped for a moment to chat with Joe Jackson, one photographer of the Sunday Independent. Mr. Morgan, the general manager, watched them for a moment, then turned with a sly grin to old Pop Reddy, feature editor of the paper.

"I didn't believe Joe would ever fall in love," he commented dryly. "I thought he was supposed to be level headed, hard boiled and all that."

"That's just the trouble," old Pop replied. "She likes him, and he's crazy about her—but he don't know it. Keeps bragging about what a sensible girl she is—just a pal, no love interest between them at all. Huh! First thing that young fellow knows, some other lad will come along with a wedding ring, and Mr. Jackson will wake up in the lurch."

"Who is the girl?"

"Peggy McNamara. I've known the family for years. Right nice girl—and a fine fellow that Jackson, too, but he needs a push."

"Hmmmmm. Well—Pat," Morgan turned back to the work piled on his table, "I'm not getting us our feature story for Sunday. Now, there's a gypsy tea room in the neighborhood where all the stenographers go for cup readings, and I think we can dig out a story from these lines."

As Mr. Morgan talked on the germ of an idea began to form in old Pop's mind.

As soon as an opportunity presented itself, Pop called Joe Jackson over to his desk.

Feature Story

"There's a story the old man wants you to handle, Joe," he began brusquely, then broke off with a knowing wink—by his own, you seem to be making out pretty well with Miss McNamara. Any time you need a couple of bucks for the license, see me, please."

Jackson joined in heartily with old Pop's laughter, but shook his head firmly.

"Nothing doing, Pop. Peggy and I are good pals—that's all. There's no foolish sentimentality in that girl's make-up—not a bit. When we get through with a sight, we never think of each other until we happen to meet again on duty."

"Oh, Yeah?" Old Pop's expression was frankly cynical. "I'll be anybody the boss sends you to go over to the Gypsy Tea room joint tomorrow evening, and get some shots of pretty girls getting their palms read. Then in cups, and all. You don't worry about girls — there'll be plenty over there."

"I suppose," Jackson shook his head and sighed. "That's women for you—for that matter, all of mankind. Now Peggy is different, she'd never in a thousand years think of—"

He broke off as Pop laughed maliciously.

"Trying to get a rise out of me, eh, Pop?" Jackson grinned. "Well, you can't do it. I'm no Romeo, and you can't make me one either. Good night."

Still chuckling at poor old Pop's misinterpretation of his platonic interest in Peggy, Jackson started home to his little room uptown. Of course, he had not been exactly right in telling Pop that he never thought of Peggy.

Love—In Out

The fact was, he thought of her quite often. But as for love—that was nonsense. He tried to dismiss himself growing sentimental over Peggy—and he chuckled again. She was not that sort, he told himself.

Near the subway he passed a florist's shop, and for a moment thought of sending Peggy some flowers as a joke. It would be fun to watch her reaction next day—they would have a good laugh over it. But he thought better of the idea, and went home.

The next day, a busy one, he caught only a fleeting glimpse of Peggy as she stood by old Pop's desk in deep conversation. That evening he took his camera and flashbulbs over to the Gypsy Tea Room. A mere handful of people were in the place, and the Gypsy Proprietress was busily engaged reading the tea cup of a girl seated at a corner table. When Jackson caught a glimpse of the girl's face, he gasped.

"Peggy," he exclaimed. She came to him blushing, confused. He drew her to a secluded corner, and gazed at her flushed pretty face in amazement.

"Peggy—you here. Why—I—I didn't think you believed this stuff. That Gypsy can't tell you anything, can she?"

"Of course she can." Peggy pouted. "I just heard something amazing."

In the soft mellow light of the romantic little tea room, Jackson seemed to see Peggy for the first time. And he realized what he should have known long before—he was desperately in love with this foolish maligned, newly-discovered little girl.

"Joe Jackson, that Gypsy told me I had a weakness for a tall, handsome photographer that liked me a little too. What do you think of that sir?"

"Peggy you don't know the half of it—" Jackson grinned excitedly, and then, without ever knowing afterwards how it happened, he kissed her.

"Good heavens, I'm on an assignment here," Jackson exclaimed in shock dismay. "But you've to celebrate tonight, and I'll never get any pictures in at all. What will Pop say?"

"Leave that to me, Joe. Old Pop is a good fellow. I think I make him understand." Peggy replied, and there was a deep, merry twinkle in her eyes, that Joe Jackson has never fathomed.

Little Benny's Note Book

Today was Nora's day off on account of Thursday, and after supper ma said to pop, Now I have to clear away the dishes, and no doubt it would be like expecting seals from Newcastle to expect you to help me.

I'll help you with dispatch and alacrity and the unforced cheerfulness with invariably accompanies my kindly acts, pop said, and ma said, O Willyum, do you mean you'll carry them out for me?

At least I'll carry out as many as I dont drop, pop said. I'm a realist, not a sentimental optimist, and there's no sliding from myself the fact that from my earliest childhood I have had a way with dishes that could be regarded with approval only by an anti-social dish manufacturer with nothing in his hart but greed and nothing in his mind but dividends. But my activity of service is one hundred per cent perfeck. Shall we get started? he said, and ma said, O never mind, I dont relish the thawt of standing in the kitchin like a statue of anxiotes forboding with my arms ipungled in dish water and my face plunged in feer of oncoming crashes.

But that's a reactionary attitiude compleetly out of time with the best modern way of thinking, pop said. Surely in these distreasting times even the humblest willingness to work should be encouraged, let the chire fall where they may, he said, and ma said, Not the chire of the remnants of my best china on my dining room carpit. Now do as I favor and abondon the subjeck to the forgotten limbo of the improbible, she said.

O well, perhaps if you cleer away by yourself in perfect peace of mind you'll be in a better mental condition to injo yize movie, pop said, and ma said, O Willyum are you going to take me to see a picture? Why didn't you say so? I'd of had the job half done by this time, she said.

And she hurry up started it and pop gave himself a privale wink in the buffay looking glass.

Women Over Forty

Need have no fear

The much talked of change
Which occurs at about this time of life
Is too greatly emphasized as a danger period.
True there is for a time a strain on the nervous system.
There may be high nervous tension
And a disposition to be irritable and moody.
It is a time to avoid excesses
And too much excitement and over fatigue.
It is essential that the blood be kept rich
And the nervous system fully nourished.
For this reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food
Is of almost priceless value at this time.
You need have no fear for the future,
For to the great majority of women
The later years are the happiest of their lives.
It is surprising the number of women
Who attribute the safe passing of this period
And the good health and happiness
Of succeeding years to the use of this nerve food.

It was decided that, under cover of this night, the little English party should try to reach British protection, a hundred miles away on the western front. Pat, game daughter of a brave soldier, had no fears.

But Pat had her hands full convincing Roger's mother that all would be well. Prince Ahmed, doubtful, promised however to have all in readiness shortly before midnight, the three received an escort of Ahmed's personal guards.

They bid their host farewell and glided through the palace gardens that were drugged with too sweet perfume. And in his royal chamber, the maharajah, fully acquainted with all that was happening, summoned a trusted official.

The maharajah gave careful instructions. "See that no harm befalls the girl!" were his words as the fellow left. Alone, a slow smile twisted his face, indicating that his highness' thoughts were not unpleasant . . . or himself.

FINAL MEETING WELFARE CLUB

Members Hear Interesting Address by L. G. Fabian

Stirling—The last regular meeting of the Stirling Community Welfare Club for the summer season was held in the community hall on Tuesday April 9, Mr. L. G. Fabian, Managing Director of the Automotive Transport Association of Ontario was the guest speaker and delivered a fine address on the problems faced by this fast growing industry in many parts of Canada and United States.

The dining room sounded at seven o'clock and the members took their places at the tables which were literally laden with the many good things to eat as supplied by the ladies of the local Women's Institute. President Tom Holmes called on Past President Doctor Ward, Wait to return thanks.

During the splendid dinner and between courses community singing was heartily entered into by everyone under the capable leadership of Robert Patterson. After the toast to the King, President Doctor Ward reminded the gathering that we were on the eve of the anniversary of the birth of Queen Alice in which the Canadian troops played such a prominent part during the great war and asked that a two minute silence be observed by the members in memory of those gallant men who made the supreme sacrifice in that encounter. Miss Betty Cooley then sang a delightful soprano solo "Morning".

Tom Ward was then called on for a three minute speech, and spoke in a fine manner of the many advantages enjoyed by the citizens of Stirling. Mr. Ward also set forth many worthwhile suggestions where by the club could still further improve conditions in the village.

Among other things he felt that through the sponsoring of such enterprises as a poultry fair by the Club would be rendering a great service to the community. Miss Betty Cooley offered a second solo at this time "Wings" accompanied as the piano by Charles Allen.

In introducing the speaker of the evening Mr. Clifford Baker spoke of his vast experience in the industry and of the conscientious manner in which he and his associates had studied the individual problems which faced them. Occupying the important position that he does, makes it necessary for Mr. Fabian to study conditions in the interests of not only this country but throughout the world. For the purpose of advising the general public with the prevailing conditions he knew of no finer medium an organization could make for a speaker to address them on the subject than the one made by the Club on this occasion.

Mr. Fabian in his opening remarks, reviewed the history and progress in means of transportation, which, he stated had been slow and without many radical changes for a hundred years when Julius Cesar used the same means of travel as did Abraham Lincoln centuries later. Then the changes became more and more apparent as the years began was used to be introduced as a driving force for vehicles. With the advent of motorized conveyances for pleasure driving at first and then for commercial use there was born into the world a new industry, that developed rapidly and without control until in recent years the situation became such that steps had to be taken and laws established for the benefit of both the industry and the people being served. Like all laws those governing this branch of industry are strictly obeyed. It is with the best interest of the people in mind that these laws are passed, and they come into existence only after careful research on the part of those in authority. One thing we have always contended, said the speaker, "Law must not stifle any industry". As time goes on and any of the many regulations become inadequate those laws must be changed to fit conditions and new times. There is in existence today such a wide range of varying laws and regulations from one area to another and from one state to another that operators almost need an encyclopaedia to make his run. This is one of the many serious difficulties which organizations such as that which Mr. Fabian represents are striving to correct through conferences held in various centres from time to time. It is commonly believed that this industry is robbing the railways of a great deal of freight and express business, said Mr. Fabian, but statistics show that only five per cent of the total tonnage of all transported goods are moved by truck and the other ninety-five per cent by train. There is sufficient business for both, was the belief of the speaker. Safety on the highway is another step being attempted by the transport association. Reduction in the hours an operator is permitted to drive has already been established to some degree, but this regulation too is being disobeyed by some of the concerns now operating. Interesting figures were given to enlighten those present and was delivered in a very interesting fashion.

Mr. Ellis extended the thanks of the organization to Mr. Fabian for the address which had been such a treat. After reports from the secretary and treasurer and the past president Tom Holmes dismissed the club until the opening of the fall season in October.

Mr. Thomas Montgomery, Sr. who returned last week after spending the winter in Tampa, Fla. says that the frost did millions of dollars worth of damage to the fruit in that section. Never in the past forty-seven years have they suffered from such severe frost. Though in some cases the fruit growers are prepared for such an emergency by placing the trees in oil heaters they will very likely not crop of next year. The frost came on at time when the growing season was at its height in December. Mr. Montgomery explained that the method of precaution against frost was the building of fires between the rows of trees. When brought to the local weather bureau frost is predicted, the growers are notified the first definite sign and the fires are started. Little heat and smoke is necessary to keep away the frost. Despite this unusual occurrence the fruit crop in general was very good and the shipments made to all parts of the world are staggering. From Plant City there was shipped in the past season one hundred and sixty-five carloads. The famous Strawberry Festival of Florida is a marvelous affair. On April 8th, Pal's Young People's Society The regular meeting of the Pal's Young People's Society was held on Monday evening April 8th, in the church parlors. The missionary division under the leadership of Miss Fanny Lansing had charge of the program. In the absence of the president, Mr. Harry Hulin, Miss Mary Hulin conducted the devotional period which was opened with a song service. Miss Mildred White reading in prayer. The Scripture lesson was read by Miss Marjorie Clements. Miss Fanny Lansing took the topic from the fourth chapter of the years study book "His Dominion of Canada" by Dr. E. H. Oliver. The study embraced the subject of early missions, and was given in an excellent manner. These topics have proven to be very interesting throughout the year, as each chapter is complete in itself. Miss Helma Mathison then offered a pleasing solo, accompanied at the piano by Miss Keitha Stapley. After the singing of another hymn, Mr. Robert Heeley presented a flower contest in which the red side gained the honours. The side count showed a good attendance at this meeting which was closed by repeating the Mizpah Benediction.

Funeral of the Late Joseph Garry

Many friends gathered at the home of Thomas Montgomery Jr. to pay their last respects to the burial of the late Joseph Garry, well known former citizen of Brighton who passed away at a Toronto hospital on Monday April 8th, in his sixtieth year, after an illness of several months duration. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. A. Retford of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. To mourn his passing are the widow, Agnes (Montgomery Garry; one daughter, Mrs. H. Ray, and one grand daughter. The pall bearers were Messrs. Carmen Pilchell, Duncan Montgomery, Lloyd Defoe, Harold Defoe, and Herman Ray. Interment was in Stirling Cemetery.

St. Paul's W. M. S.

The Easter meeting of St. Paul's Women's Missionary Society was held in the church parlours on Wednesday afternoon, April 10th, with the president, Mrs. Lawlor in the chair. The hymns for the occasion were chosen by Mrs. James Currie. The roll call was answered by fifteen ladies responding to the word sacrifice. Mrs. M. Sine led in prayer. At the March meeting a letter was read from Mrs. Hayward, nee (Ruth Eggleston), and it was decided that the society send a budget answer with each member contributing a page. The talk from the study book was given in a very capable manner by Mrs. Fred Jackman. Mrs. Arthur Scott presented a report of the activities which took place at the Presbyterial held in Picton on March 14 and 15, which she attended in detail with great interest. The final number on the program was the presentation of a pageant by several of the ladies, giving a vivid illustration of a woman's life in India. This interesting meeting was closed with the Benediction.

Mrs. Melville Gibson and daughter visited at the home of her mother, Mrs. Orrin McCutcheon this week.

Rev. and Mrs. R. W. Rowland and Mrs. Musgrove spent Tuesday in Toronto, while in the city Mr. Rowland attended a conference of the Missionary and Maintenance Board of the United Church.

PRISONERS SAFE BUT FIRE SPREADS

Structure Near Halifax Institution Takes Fire

Halifax, April 11 (CP)—Fire broke out Wednesday afternoon in a group of wooden buildings attached to Melville Military Prison, on an island in Halifax harbor's northwest arm.

The blaze sprang up in a vacant warehouse a short distance from the stone building where prisoners are quartered. It threatened to spread to nearby frame structures. None of the prisoners appeared in danger and they were not moved.

As the Halifax fire department sped to the scene in the auto squirts from the burning building leaped high in the air, fanned by a strong wind toward a group of other buildings.

A detachment of the Army Service Corps was rushed to the spot to attempt to check the flames.

Cause of the outbreak in the warehouse was not determined immediately.

DANGERS IN DELAY

Report Indicates Pressing Need For State Inter vention

Ottawa, April 12.—(CP)— Long after the question of the causes of the depression has been settled, the problem of how to distribute the purchasing power which exists will remain, and the solution of that problem, or the failure to find a solution, will determine whether the people are to enjoy the abundance which modern science and invention have made possible, or whether they are to be condemned to poverty in the midst of plenty.

These are the words with which the Royal Commission on Price Spreads of Goods opens its report, which was presented to the House of Commons today by Hon. Wesley A. Gordon, Minister of Labor.

In members said they were satisfied there is some international control of competition in this plant and can manufacture in which the price of the product is kept at an exorbitant height while the price received by the growers has fallen to unprecedently low levels.

With respect to canning companies, the commission expressed the belief that the elimination of the practice of selling to customers should be curbed.

In the furniture industry it found 84 per cent of employees in 36 factories with 40 per cent. of the industry's capital, were paid $20 a week or less and that pay for boys 16-18 years old ranged from $6 to $8 a week.

Unless flour milling companies write down their capital structures and confine part of their earnings to capacity they are faced with bankruptcy.

If those who direct milling industry persist in maintaining costly structures to the detriment of shareholders and public at large, or exhibits.

Highlights of Report

Recommendation for creation of a five-man federal trade and industry commission with wide powers of law-enforcement, business investigation, suppression of unfair and unethical commercial practices.

Commission recommended placing fruit and vegetable growers under Dominion Marketing Board, establishing of minimum prices for primary products, appointment of a committee of fair practices, licensing of all processors.

Majority of commission recommended setting up of a livestock board with wide powers of price fixation and inspection. Three Liberal members doubted wisdom of setting up board, while one dissented from practically the whole report.

Commissioners recommended all shipments of livestock be made to the public market, where practicable, and that direct shipment to packers be made subject to similar rules as shipments to public yards.

Provincial governments urged to enforce minimum wage laws. Milk boards called upon to set up machinery for settlement of disputes between producers and distributors.

Provinces urged to decrease working week and bring under one control minimum wage and working hours. A working week of 44 hours recommended. Overtime should be paid over the 44 hours.

A volume of 480 printed pages comprises the main and dissenting reports as well as annexes and bits

Flour Milling Industry Warned to Cut Capital

Ottawa, April 12.—(CP)—Unless the flour milling companies of Canada write down their capital structures and the capital value of their surplus capacity, they are faced with bankruptcy, is the warning conveyed in the report of the Price Commission on Mass Buying tabled today in the House of Commons. Given conditions of free competition, bankruptcy would be a bold off much longer, the report says.

In view of the fact the industry has a capacity of 30,000,000 barrels plus capacity over a 30-year period, it was pointed out, the value of all of the industry had been bearing the burden of its cost. The report points out that price competition is maintained between milling companies would allow the resulting situation to work itself out by the elimination of the inefficient.

The only possible alternative which might be considered is not some scheme of rationalization designed to save the industry at the expense of the public but the complete regulation and control of the industry, or at least of the large mills, by the government.

Those who direct the industry persist in maintaining present costly structures and capitalization to the detriment of the shareholders and, ultimately, the general public, serious consideration would have to be given to the acceptance of this alternative. At present, however we feel that no adequate reason has been advanced to justify government intervention and that it is undesirable for the government to interfere in the internal problems of these large corporations.

Complaints of price discrimination might well be left to the proposed federal trade and industry commission, the report says.

LOWERED TARIFFS NEED, SAYS YOUNG

Less Government Interference Favored in Minority Report

Ottawa, April 12—(CP)—Lowered tariffs, increased foreign markets and less government interference with business were the main recommendations of C. A. Young (Lib., Weyburn) in his minority reports as member of the Price Spreads Commission. He is known in Parliament as a militant free trader.

In his report, tabled today in the House of Commons, the Saskatchewan member said government interference in business will not cure the economic ills of the country.

"It will generally be found that prices will come down when the government certain hampering restrictions and privileges which interfere with the free play of economic forces."

No Expropriations

Dealing with specific industries, Mr. Young said the plight of Ontario and Quebec farmers was due to overproduction and found "there is no evidence the tobacco manufacturers were exploiting the growers."

BODIES HURLED AS BUS IS SEVERED BY FAST EXPRESS

14 School Children Terribly Mangled in Fatality

MORE MAY SUCCUMB

Horrifying Scene is Described by An Eyewitness

(By Ben Robertson)

Rockville, Md., April 12.—(AP)—Amid scenes of carnage, reminiscent of the recently ended Argic task of identifying fourteen High School children, killed late last night crossing a fast express train tore a school bus in two at a grade crossing.

Physicians feared the death list might grow. Reports that other fourteen persons, including a school teacher and the bus driver, suffered injuries and it was believed some might die.

The accident was wet and foggy as the bus, bearing the party from a chemistry exhibit at the University of Maryland, College Park, towards their homes at Williamsport, Maryland, approached the grade crossing here.

Though Baltimore and Ohio railroad officials said the crossing was guarded by a bell and red light, the bus driver declared he did not see the train until he was on the track.

"I heard the whistle just as it hit me," he sobbed afterward. "I didn't see the train until I heard the bell of the engine as I started across the track."

The five-a train bound from St. Louis to Washington, struck the bus in the middle, smashed it to bits, and dragged the wreckage half a mile down the track before to stop it. aside, a mass of wreckage, bodies, bleeding and dying lay about. Identification, were strewn along the track for 200 yards, some were tossed into a cemetery nearby.

The accident occurred outside the casement window of Rev. Cecil J. Mcneal who hurried outside and administered the last rites of the Catholic Church to dead and dying. He found two bodies on the engine's cow-catcher.

Story of Eyewitnesses

A vivid eyewitness account came from Sidney Hall, Jr., Secretary of the, golf pro at the Manor Club who passed the bus in his motor car a few hundred feet away.

"I was behind Yoward Norbeck," he said, "and saw the train coming but I crossed anyway. I passed the bus and saw the train hit it. Then I grabbed my brake and just as I stopped the train hit the bus."

Hall said he saw the bus. "There was young fellow there on a bicycle trying to get across. I held him back to the corner and blow the fire whistle." Fire Chief Wilson Carr of Rockville, had appeared and he started taking girls out of the ditch. The first child he brought out of the Rockville firemen arrived.

"We laid them out right up the laundry track and take the children to the hospital," he said. "Many not badly hurt were found in St. Mary's Cemetery. They were in the front of the bus."

"We saw arms and legs and a girl's body," another fireman said over.

Ambulances and emergency squads clanged to the scene from Rockville and nearby towns. Nine bodies were taken to the undertaking rooms of Rockville where the teacher, Miss Louise Pumo, 27, of Hagerstown, Md., sought to aid in the identification some she was bruised and shaken herself.

White and trembling, the teacher told the story of the fatal accident.

"I felt myself spinning around," she faltered, "and I was thrown against the driver, who was in turn wedged against the steering wheel.

"Accidents are Committed" Prevention Body is Told

Hamilton, April 12—(CP)—Accidents never happen—they are committed, therefore, they can be prevented, Dr. A. H. Wingfield of Hamilton Collegiate Institute told 1,200 delegates from Ontario to the annual convention of the Industrial Accident Prevention Association which closed Thursday.

"When we say a thing happens by chance, we mean by chance, meaning that event cannot be determined," Dr. Wingfield explained. Having selected the best type of worker to handle any new machine, field said, industrial management should see to it that staff are educated to set in motion forces which will prevent themselves or others.

Speaking on psychological suggestions to adopt educational methods based on the laws of learning in order safe habits may be efficiently and permanently learned. Up to the age of 40 there is very little decrease in the ability to learn.

"You can teach an old dog new tricks provided he has the ability and the will to learn," Dr. Wingfield added, "but you cannot teach

Farmer's Help Ploughs in Road As Fast as Fox Farmer Grades It

Hamilton, April 12.—(CP)— An attempt by Nathaniel Harvey, fox farm proprietor, to grade an unused, hilly registered street running through the property of Councillor William Bell, fruit grower, has resulted in action in the Hamilton civic marshalled his men together and with the help of the Lorry he graded the land into shape for a driveway. Bell man harrowed it back into farmland. All day long Mr. Harvey and his men harrowed and then yesterday worked on the road but when he completed one mile it was ripped and torn up again by the Bell men who used harrows, lorry and a tractor in cultivating.

Up and down marched the opposing forces one morning the good road was completed by the other until at the end of the day the street was the most cultivated churned-up piece of land in all of that part of the province.

At last weary and tired over the fast pace set and with their horses and men all in the two opposing factions called it a day with nary a burst of temper. Councillor Bell, however, went to the office of Judge N. R. Munro at silicon, secured a writ and returned to his workmen from inaugurating on the road. Harvey and his men, however, had left and when yesterday worked on the road but when he completed one mile it was ripped and torn up again by the Bell men who used harrows, lorry and a tractor in cultivating.

Up and down marched the opposing forces one morning the good road was completed by the other until at the end of the day the street was

Veteran Paints Picture Should Another War Occur Along Rhine and in France

A Belleville war veteran who slushed through the muddy mire holes of France and Belgium in the last great conflict has been inspired by recent threats of another war to discuss his method of how best to carry on the next one if one occurs.

"It is supposed that this threatening war shall take place on the same field, or practically so, in France and along the Rhine. And it is also a supposition, that the Germans shall comprise "the enemy," he comments.

"It is the intention to send back as an army all the returned men."

"Put conditions this time will be somewhat different.

"The commanders of this army will be chosen from an honorary staff of men, which will be composed of about twenty-five or forty, who had in the old army been privates, with perhaps, an odd sergeant and possibly a second lieutenant or two.

"The active staff, working under the instructions of the Commander-in-Chief, and the special staff as outlined will be composed of those who previously in the last unpleasantness, held staff positions, "brass hats," Generals, Majors, Major-Generals, Brigadiers, Colonels, Captains, D.S.O.'s, D.S.O.'s, D.F.C., C.O.D.'s, R.S.V.P.'s, etc. This is the staff which on account of their previous experience, will do the planning.

"The honorary staff will be the advance party to visit the battlefields, Marchiels and Aquitaine to arrange the disposition of the troops. Distinction will be made

VETERANS ENJOY MINSTREL SHOW

Locally Formed Troupe Entertain at Memorial Hall

Ten blackfaced comedians attired in the latest minstrel trappings and with a program of over one hour and a half of rapid-fire musical logue, dialogue and funny skits featured the regular monthly meeting of the local Post 201 Army and Navy Veterans in Canada in the city last evening.

Recently formed among the members, the Plug Street Minstrel Veterans' Troupe, now officially named, completed the first "broadcast" over "Station ANV" with Interlocutor Comrade J. Lassaby officiating at the microphone, and assisted by Comrades "Billy" Edwards and "Sam" Turner as end men, and with W. Baldock, Fred Stagg, T. Pritchard, J. McGuire, Hamnet Pointer, Sid Hector and Thomas Gill as the troupe, the evening's entertainment was voted one of the most novel and unusual yet yet arranged. Individual solos were given by Wm. Edwards, Wm. Baldwin, Samuel Turner, Thos. Pritchard, Sid Hector and Fred Stagg, also by Prof. Morgan on the piano. Cheered by the success of the concert and its reception by the large crowd present at the meeting, members of the troupe gave notice of repeat concerts in the city with proceeds taken in to be devoted to charitable purposes among needy members.

The formation of a new committee, to be known as the "visiting committee" with the appointment of Comrades W. Jeffery, Quentin Boyd and F. Gillett as members, and the presentation of the audited quarterly report submitted by treasurer W. Willerton, completed the general business of the meeting. Comrade Geo. McIntosh was appointed from the general body on the finance committee to work with president and treasurer in the handling of expenditures.

In submitting the carefully prepared report, treasurer Willerton called attention to the considerable outlay during the past quarter for the maintenance of the hall. Repairs during the past quarter cost $309; coal, $300; relief among needy members for the same period totalled $50, while a further $20 had been donated the Salvation Army Band. A comfortable bank balance remains it was shown by the treasurer, previous to its adoption by members.

A social evening followed the business of the general meeting and the concert arranged by the minstrel troupe.

FUEL PACKAGED AND SOLD OVER GROCERY COUNTERS

"Nothing new under the sun" said the man who overlooked the fact that much really new work is in progress and that something new is constantly appearing. Under this heading might be classed a new fuel which is sold in package form in grocery stores, that has just made its appearance in Belleville. This fuel has been introduced in Toronto and other cities and is said to have been a success. It will be manufactured in Belleville from very fine coal screenings, turned into reasonably sized blocks by pressure, then individually wrapped in strong kraft paper with gummed tape, several of which are placed in one package, paper wrapped, 4x8x12 inches and are placed right on the fire, paper and all. The absence of any dirt in handling is one of the advantages claimed for this new style fuel.

Machinery for the manufacture of the new fuel (called Fuel Pak) in Belleville has been arranged for by Harry Smith Ice and Fuel Co., Pinnacle Street, and will be in operation shortly. In the meantime samples of the new fuel now on display in various local stores are attracting interested attention.

ROMANCE BLAMED FOR GIRL'S DEATH

Nurse Too Late to Save Actress From Plunging From Window

New York, April 12—(AP)—Blighted romance was blamed today for the death plunge of pretty Betty Hamilton, 21-year-old Manhattan actress, girl who rose to fame in British motion pictures.

Miss Hamilton leaped from the 11th floor of a midtown hotel last night. A nurse who had been attending her left the room briefly, and returning, saw the girl perched on the window sill. The nurse rushed forward, too late to restrain Miss Hamilton.

Rud Pollack, Miss Hamilton's manager, told police several weeks ago Miss Hamilton's engagement to Frey Levy, radio station owner was announced, and choosing domesticity to a motion picture career, the girl rejected her offer from a film producing company.

There was a dispute between the engaged couple, the manager told police, and Miss Hamilton became morose, several times threatening suicide.

LIFE RETURNS TO OTTAWA ALONE

While an anxious husband was searching the local vicinity for his missing spouse yesterday with the aid of police authorities, his wife apparently became refreshed and returned to her home in Ottawa alone.

Wednesday morning an Ottawa commercial traveller related a strange tale to the police in relation to the mysterious disappearance of his wife, who was to have met him on Dundas Street after staying all night in a local hotel. When the traveller drove his motor car eastward on Dundas Street in search of his wife, no signs of her were forthcoming. The man remained in Belleville all night unsuccessfully searching for his wife, who had become impatient and procured transportation home to Ottawa, it was learned.

BUILDERS PROTEST ARCHITECT BILL

Measure With Amendments Sent to Legislature

Toronto, April 12—In a lengthy memorandum, builders and contractors of the Province represented by the Home Builders' Association of Toronto opposed passage of a bill entitled the Architects' Act before the Private Bills Committee of the Legislature.

The bill which seeks to regulate the profession by providing a board of examiners to license architects, among other things specifies any one other than a licensed architect who draws plans for a structure or an alteration which costs more than $5,000 shall be liable to prosecution.

The bill also provides any builder or contractor who supervises erection or alteration of a structure costing more than $5,000 shall therefore be liable to a penalty.

A representative of the home builders said the contractors did not wish to set themselves up as architects, "but that we be allowed to carry on as in the past."

Percy Parker pointed out the measure would seriously affect farmers who were accustomed to draw their own plans and supervise their own construction.

J. C. McTuer, K.C., acting for the opposition to the bill, presented a number of amendments which he said had been drawn, to satisfy the lumbering and mining industries.

Major J. H. Clark, (Windsor) said the "pitiful" way fly-by-night contractors have been allowed to operate in this Province. They have griped everybody and the stuff they have put up is a disgrace. This bill protects the honest builders."

The Border City areas had been particularly victimized, said Major Clark.

T. W. Timmins, speaking for the builders, charged the measure would gradually eliminate contractors from designing building as the bill provided only builders in business for years would secure permission to draw plans and that in future only graduate architects would be licensed.

"It is playing into the hands of the architects," he said. The committee accepted Mr. McTuer's amendments and decided to send the bill to the legislature.

2 WIVES ALLEGED HUSBAND KILLERS

Bournemouth And Budapest Scenes of Trials

Bournemouth, England, April 12 (CP Cable)—Alleged confessions of guilt were introduces Thursday when Mrs. Alma Rattenbury, 31, and George Stone, her 19-year-old chauffeur, faced preliminary hearing on charges of the murder of the woman's 67-year-old husband, Francis Mawson Rattenbury who designed the Parliament Buildings in Victoria, B.C.

Rattenbury under the name of Lozanne has published a number of songs and in her teens was said to have played with the Toronto Philharmonic. Testimony was that Mrs. Rattenbury nicknamed her elderly husband "Rata."

A large number of women, two elderly matrons at their head, stood in line before the court room awaiting the opening.

According to statements from the police read by the prosecution both accused admitted swinging the heavy mallet with which Rattenbury received head wounds that caused his death a few days afterwards.

Budapest, April 12 (CP-Havas)—A woman armed with shooting her husband and disposing of the body by cutting it into small pieces and throwing it into a cistern, was placed on trial here. The prosecutor demanded the death penalty.

The accused, Mme. Eulenne Bognar, according to the prosecutor, had requested a marriage broker to help her find a new husband before killing M. Bognar. The case has aroused widespread attention due to the fact Mme. Bognar gave birth to a daughter while in prison awaiting trial.

Sees Picture Taken in France

Halifax, April 12 (CP)—A surprise was in store for Fritz Schaefer, when he attended the screening of Canada's official war picture "Lest We Forget."

When he saw Fritz Schaefer leap out at him from the screen, he recalled how he had seen the sprinting championship of the Canadian forces in France.

The camera had caught him winning the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds at the sports meet at Thiepval, France, July 1, 1918. He came in ahead of the great South African, Reg. Walker. In the 100-yard event in Woking, on True, to establish a mark of 9.4 seconds. In 1917 he won the 100 and 200-yard dashes at the Canadian track and field championships at Seaford, England.

Brilliant Galaxy Of Statesmen Now at Stresa

By The Associated Press

The Tri-Power Conference at Stresa, Italy, brings together today one of the most brilliant galaxies of European statesmen assembled since the Locarno Treaty was signed, also on Lake Maggiore's shores 10 years ago.

Host to the conference is broad-browed Benito Mussolini, Italy's Premier. He comes to Stresa accompanied by no foreign minister—he is his own. In his person a majority of the Italian cabinet attends the conversations, for Il Duce holds seven of the 13 portfolios in his government.

Mussolini bespeaks Italy's hopes for peace, but he makes it no secret, that powerful military machine is as his call in the event any nation should venture to threaten Italian security.

Of an entirely dissimilar school of diplomacy is Great Britain's aging Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald. The peace-loving Scot has definite his talents and strength unstintingly to the cause of international rapprochement.

He rattles no sabres, prefers soft words and calm discussions as the way to understanding. Now, in what many observers regard as the twilight of his political career, he is confronted with the most critical challenge he has met in his crusade for good-will among nations.

France's Premier, tall and youngish Pierre-Etienne Flandin, has been forced to turn his attention to diplomacy from perplexing domestic problems.

Meeting one hour after another affecting France's currency, finance commerce and military policies, he is living this the even more muddled international situation. Like Mussolini, the energetic Frenchman has let the world know, that while France hopes for peace, she is prepared to fight for it.

The French Premier has a seasoned aide in Pierre Laval, 52-year-old Foreign Minister. The Lacons butcher's son has labored diligently to win for France the security for which she conducts a never-ceasing quest.

Like Flandin, MacDonald has the support of his Foreign Secretary, bald-pated Sir John Simon. One of England's leading barristers, Sir John has a reputation for brilliant logic and suave negotiation. He is certain to figure prominently in the Stresa activities as he reviews for the representatives of the powers the results of his Berlin conversations with Reichschancellor Hitler.

Normaley is Required For Open Wheat Mart

Winnipeg, April 12—(CP)—Before the grain business of Canada can again be carried on by the grain trade on an open market basis, without government restrictions and assistance, the world must return to normal John J. McFarland, General Manager of the Canadian Wheat Pool said in an address before the Winnipeg Canadian Club today.

"So long as all important countries of the world continue to subsidise wheat production" he said, "I am sure the insulated open futures system cannot be permitted to serve as the medium for fixation of values in this country."

ENGLISHMEN AND FLOWERS

This is the time of year when the flower-loving propensities of the Englishman and of the Canadian-born of English parentage are revealed in all their glory. There is not an Englishman in Belleville or in any part of the world who is not at this moment at work on spring and summer plans for his garden and lawn.

In some peculiar way the Englishman draws vitality from nature and flowers. He is the man whose race has the greatest of empires, whose people are the world's greatest colonizers, he is the man who is so honest that everyone can read his character in his face, who carries a little bit of England to every part of the globe wherever he goes, who is the puzzle to those who are not of British race and who cannot reconcile his strength and his gentleness, or his quiet and calm with his devotion to the death for a cause and those seemingly incompatible qualities which are moulded into that unique type of man, the Englishman.

This strong man, this man who makes the world one vast playground, he strives to do so, is as tender as the tenderest stem of a flower. He loves a garden and he loves flowers; and flowers and gardens are of course closely associated with "the Englishman's castle", which is his home.

One of the finest exhibitions of the Englishman abroad is his love for flowers is to be seen at the well known Church of St. John's, Norway, Toronto, in whose cemetery the ground is covered the year round with flowers. It is easy to understand: the congregation is largely English in origin and the Sons of England have given a large number of persons to this parish.

But not only Toronto, but every city and town show traces of the English love for flowers and gardens.

A GREAT NEWSPAPERMAN

Rising to one of the highest positions in the newspaper world, Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the greatest newspaper in the United States, The New York Times, is dead at the age of 77 years. As a young man he was a carrier newsboy and later a printer's apprentice at Knoxville, Tenn. He became a journeyman printer, owner and publisher of The Chattanooga Times. In 1896 he acquired The New York Times and within forty years made it the most influential newspaper in the New World. He became rich, but he was generous.

"All the news that's fit to print" was his motto for The Times and that legend appears on the top left corner of every issue of The New York Times. He made the paper of the highest type, a work of art, of accuracy and of decency. He did not care so much for circulation as he did for the moral tone of his paper, for its completeness, and the care that went into its production.

The quiet dignity, the tireless quest of progress, and the vision of the man were expressed in his lifework, The New York Times. Those who profited by his work doing good unseen by the mob like to think of Mr. Ochs who lived a life of quiet self-effacement.

At his death a whole continent mourns. At his funeral he was held up as a lesson for young men to "use your dreams, use your ideals, make them come true," said the minister who, taking the services with a Jewish rabbi, remarked that he made his dreams, his visions and his ideals come to pass. He built his newspapers, his philanthropies and his very fame on the foundations of God, truth, right, honor, loyalty and human welfare. He was a great man, a great American, and a great Jew."

NAMES OF CONFERENCES

Diplomats today have a faculty of "throwing parties" in the loveliest of settings, places with names which sound like music, such as Locarno, Isola Bella, Lake Maggiore, Stresa, and even the world's great city of London, or Versailles.

These place names serve as means of identifying the numerous meetings which have been and will be held to straighten out the tangled problems of international fears, armaments, and discords.

Europe is such a small continent as compared with the vastness of the extent of the North American continent that it is easy enough to change from one country to the other—it is only a matter of a few hours' travel to cross Europe. The journeys of the British diplomats to Berlin, Moscow, Warsaw and Czechoslovakia prove that.

Some day some great international political event which will have importance of the greatest importance will no doubt be held in one of the Canadian cities or towns and place this country on the diplomatic map for ages yet to come. That is, when the world is more a unit than it is at this present moment; when the present fine methods of travel have been improved and speeded up.

What a name for a place of meeting as Stresa or Isola Bella! Or course, Italian names sound harmonious, and their cities are set as pearls in that land of ancient history and eternal beauty. Yet other lands have beauty spots where world meets can be held. At present it is largely Europe that is trying to "find itself." The day will come when the conferences will be world-wide. Naturally today the meetings are held in the countries most convenient of access. Europeans would not find it necessary to travel across the ocean to reach a table to about which to confer, although international meetings have been held in Washington.

GET OUT OF DEBT

Moose Jaw Evening Times tells how to make progress out of hard times and the argument will take plenty of answering because the Times is satisfied. Here is the recipe:

"Did you ever stop to think that if all the debt-ridden cities were free of debt and spent on public works the amounts now raised by taxation, local and principal payments what a wonderful works programme every city could carry out every year? The way to "fix" the money power is for every municipality to get out of debt, keep out of debt, and spend on public improvements instead of paying interest. Such a goal is not impossible of achievement, and any refinancing schemes now worked out should have this ideal as its objective. In prosperous times the annual revenues, a reserve could be built up by municipalities, even as is done by large corporations, which could be used to decrease taxation, or provide work during a depression. It is debt and interest that creates the money power."

SLIGHTLY MIXED ABOUT CHURCHES

Joe Greathead purchased the United Church sheds in Southampton and engaged a gang of half a dozen men to tear down the buildings. One of the workmen meandered over to the United Church sheds after dinner and commenced raring the structure.

However, the sixth man, Howard Brechow, got his signals crossed and hied himself by mistake to the Presbyterian sheds. At supper time Brechow ran into the other quintette coming from work. They asked him why he hadn't reported for duty, and the puzzled Berchow replied by asking why nobody had come to help him.

Suspecting something was wrong, Greathead went over to the Presbyterian sheds and imagine the consternation when he discovered that Brechow, a hard worker, had torn all the shingles and the sheeting off the roof and ripped half the shingles off the other side. Now both sheds are practically demolished, although one job was ordered.—Chesley Enterprise.

COST OF EDUCATION IN CANADA

Expenditure for schools, colleges and universities dropped from the peak of $178,700,000 in 1931 to $163,945,000 in 1932-33, the latest year for which cost of school year ending in 1933 show a still greater drop to $146,922,000. The fall continued in 1934. Though its exact extent is not yet known available data indicate the total for 1934 was probably not above $130,000,000. Up to 1933 the percentage drop was much greater in Ontario and the western provinces than in Quebec and the Maritimes. Capital expenditures have generally been brought to a very low level. Teachers' salaries in the provinces for which 1934 records have been received, show a three-year decrease of about one-third. Reductions have been much more severe in rural schools than in towns and cities. A shortage of funds has led some communities to shorten the teaching year by a few weeks, while very few schools have been continuously closed for any considerable time.—Bureau of Standards.

RADICAL WOMEN: CONSERVATIVE MALES

The outlandishness of women's dress ten years ago, as disclosed by the exhibition staged at the London Museum, will amuse the reader while it draws attention to the swiftness with which feminine fashion changes. Gone are the skirts of extravagant shortness which were all the rage in 1926. To the eye of 1935 they appear grotesque. But it is strange that, while women alters the cut and character of her clothes at such a breathless pace, man hardly moves at all. It would require a sartorial expert to distinguish between the suit of 1926 and that of 1935. The absurder forms of male apparel were for the most part discarded before the war. And since the war the efforts of aesthetes and of dress reformers have failed to induce the male to wear quaint raiment or bright colours.—London Daily Mail.

MICAWBER, eternally waiting for something to turn up, is a perfect picture of a lot of people who are always mourning for the "good old times", wailing that the present times are out of joint, everything all wrong, etc. Folks who refuse to wait for something to turn up but get busy and turn something up have the laugh on the Micawbers.

Men are led by trifles.—Napoleon.

"THE OPEN ROAD"

"Oh, the jungle fires are burning
Down beside the railroad track;
The birds of spring are singing,
And I think I must go back.
Each rattler on the railroad
Shows its open, friendly door,
And the long steel tracks are shining
In the Land of Nevermore.

"The grass and flowers are springing
Beside the country ways,
And the trees in leaf are turning
To the sun's warm, pleasant rays.
The cat's bloom on the bushes
And the Mocha flows so free,
And the haystacks and the lockups
To slumber sweet woo me.

"My feet are itching, itching,
To be out upon the road,
Where Freedom softly beckons
And there is no labor load;
Where Care is foreign to me,
And Worry's lost her goad—
In the Land of Never-was-ness—
The Happy Open Road!

"Tawaken with a murmur,
A'list the song of a car.
I look around and vision
Old-timers by the score.
We're in the Home and here to stay,
In this attractive bricky abode—
Farewell to days of glory past,
And to the Open Road!"

x x x

"THE OPEN ROAD" described in the above poem, written by E. G. Downs, one of the Star Boarders at the Printers' Home in Colorado, is an open road, not a closed road, but a closed road. Time was when 'Tourist' (sometimes called tramp) printers roamed the land and every printing office expected so many calls a year, especially during the summer season, for the "tourist printer" always dug in for the winter, generally in some city of his choice where the "subbing" was good or book and job offices were busy. As a rule "tourist printers" were newspaper printers, a rather different breed from the type-slug along, stay-at-home, steady book and job printer. With the coming in of type-setting machines the travel days of the hand-set printer were over. A new era opened, a mechanical era which had little sentiment, and looked not kindly upon the convivial habits of the old-time print. Mr. Downs writes in The Lincoln News for March that the Pinters' Home is sort of a Grand Hotel, that there are 350 boarders, mostly old-time printers like himself, who know all about 'panhandling', 'carrying the banner', 'Shylocks', 'cashing a string', etc., and know more about the 13-m ranks than Golden Rule. Mr. Downs admits that the grey in his hair is due to seventy-five winters, but still has hopes of "catching on" somewhere, sometime, a little job, believing that he can still hold his own with the youngsters and pile up just as big a "string" as anyone. May the old-time prints gathered together in Colorado in the eventide of life, enjoy to the full that good fellowship which flows so full and free when good fellows get together.

ONE OF THE FEATURES of the King's Silver Jubilee will be a Canadian silver dollar, which is being minted, which will be released about May 1. There will also be issued by the Bank of Canada a $25 bill which will carry pictures of the King and Queen and the coronation robes. Just a question if this twenty-five dollar bill is a good idea, folks might want to keep them for souvenirs and thus take them out of circulation. We are imagine ourselves having a pocketful of the King's Silver Jubilee twenty-five dollar bills and hesitating to spend them on account of their attractive appearance and the occasion which they commemorate. However, that's just imagination.

MIDNIGHT INDIAN WAR DANCES on the Armouries lawn by noisy Juveniles bring complaints from folks who want to sleep. Gosh! what a lot of time some folks waste in sleep.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 Years Ago

APRIL 12th, 1915.

Navigation is now open. The schooner Grace M. Piber cleared for Oswego yesterday afternoon for coal. The crew is composed of Capt. Joe Fagan, master; Frank Smith, mate; Joe Lansing-her, cook; Theo. Jardine, and William Sweet. This good vessel has been thoroughly overhauled and is in good shape for the summer trade. She is considered one of the best schooners on the lake. The tug Ray Staunton arrived from Oswego this morning from Kingston. Last spring the bay was clear of ice on April 21st., and on that date the schooners Grace M. Piber and Keewatin cleared for Oswego and the steam barge John Rolph passed down the bay. The schooner Fiber arrived here with coal on May 1st, and the steamer Belleville comes into port on May 3rd.

Yesterday was an exceptionally fine day and many persons, young and old, were attracted to the water front. So great was the demand for boats that the boat liveries were all empty in the afternoon. This is perhaps a record for the 11th. day of April.

BARNUM SAID PEOPLE LIKE TO BE FOOLED

Can Psychology Explain "There's a Fool Born Every Minute"

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph. D. Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Barnum, a famous showman, was in the habit of saying many pithy, true things. It was he who said that people like to be humbugged.

Let us examine the matter and see whether or not Barnum was correct. It is impossible to estimate the number of people who fall for bogus stock oil, mining and other promotion schemes. The number of fraudulent drugs daily by confidence men is never revealed.

The large number of those who, lured by the expectation of quick wealth, place their money, often hard earned, into the pockets of these criminals is an unknown quantity.

And people are humbugged in other ways, too. They pay their physician, a man with scientific training, a fee for advice, then go home and follow the advice of a neighbor, instead.

They purchase patent medicines by the gallon, at a price much higher than the cost of the crude drugs they contain, simply because the quantity of the bottle promises to cure everything.

They patronize the famous shops of the great cities, when they could get merchandise just as good and much cheaper around the corner for no better reason than they like to show off the trade's label.

It is all right to be humbugged, if you can afford it. The strange part is that those who have sufficient means do not allow themselves to be duped.

Has psychology an explanation to offer?

We're all constitutionally lazy, and some of us have never outgrown it. Those are the ones who let themselves be talked into believing that you can get something for nothing without work.

Coupled with this is ignorance of life and the human nature.

Those are the people whose child-like outlook enables them to fall back for relief and hope upon phantasy and day-dreaming. This is the psychology of the class.

In others, we find similar mental mechanisms. It is easier to take for granted than to investigate. It's easier to believe what they want to believe. It's delightful to pretend and make people think you are wonderful.

Barnum certainly was right. Fool yourself, if you want to, but it is an expensive pastime.

Wouldn't it be better to face facts? Is it not better to find the truth

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

A mother's milk supply usually is not adequate until the fourth day after the baby's life. Breast feeding should be run on a strict schedule, and the child should be awakened at feeding time.

At the beginning of the third month of life, the feeding given at 2 A. M. can usually be cut instead as the child sleeps uninterruptedly through the night.

11 HOUR SESSION CLEARS BUSINESS OF LEGISLATURE

Adjournment Called at 4.05 a.m. Today by Premier

FOUR BILLS DEBATED

Centralization Police Bill Likely to be Moved Over Till Fall

Toronto, April 12 (CP)—Wearied from more than 11 hours of continuous session, Ontario Legislature breathed a sigh of relief at 4.05 o'clock this morning, when Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn moved adjournment of the third all-night session of the week after members had been at their desks from three o'clock yesterday afternoon with only a two-hour interruption for dinner.

Starting at 8.40 o'clock last night after third reading had been given the bill to cancel Quebec power contracts, the House plodded through the order paper. Twenty-four bills passed through the committee stage and four others were given second reading in the time of opposition charges of "steamroller" tactics.

At 1.35 o'clock this morning the Premier told Leopold Macaulay (Cons. York South) the sitting would last until the order paper was cleared, possibly until 6 o'clock this morning. To charges of unfairness, Mr. Hepburn replied: "You were bragging yesterday how you could take it. Now, let's see you."

Four bills were the focal point of debate. In committee the House argued over amendments to the Ontario training schools, highway improvement, milk control, and game and fisheries acts. Before it received second reading, J. A. Craig (Cons. Lanark) raised lengthy objection to amendments in the game and fish acts, objecting to shooting for use of dogs in hunting.

Although it was on the order paper, Mr. Roebuck's police centralization bill was not discussed in committee. There were reports the government would defer consideration until the fall session.

Tempers flared towards the end of the session. Interrupted by Ian Strachan (Lib., Toronto-St. George) who said George H. Challies (Cons., Grenville-Dundas) was reading his speech, Mr. Challies abruptly ceased speaking, declaring members were not interested.

Highway Policy Questioned

"Thats up to you," said Speaker N. O. Hipel.

"Up to you" is not dignified in this house," returned Mr. Challies.

"I'm taking no lead from you," replied the speaker.

"Name him," urged Harold J. Kirby (Lib., Toronto-Eglinton).

"Go ahead, name him. I challenge you," Mr. Challies replied.

Mr. Macaulay questioned the Government on its highway policy during discussion of the amendment to the Highway Improvement Act. It provided for assumption by the government of some of Provincial Highways and revenues derived under the Act should be applied to the Highway Improvement Fund. The former highed highways minister said he saw nothing in the Act to provide revenue from the gasoline tax should be designated for highways.

"We're going to peg the highway debt," said the Premier.

"You haven't pegged anything yet," returned Mr. Macaulay, who charged through "squandering" of money in the north the government would find it had spent more money there than it expects to obtain. The Premier said Gasoline Tax Revenue would be earmarked for highways.

Mr. McVicar (Lib. Lambton East) declared before the past Provincial election the former government had 72 men working on highways in his district but there was work available for less than 100.

Mr. Macaulay's amendment to require the government pay costs of all provincial highways construction since July 1, 1934, was defeated.

Conservatives objected to a clause in Mr. Roebuck's bill to amend the Insurance Act, ruling out liability of a driver from damage claims when a near-relative was injured or killed in the Bill passed without amendment.

"You might as well shut up the House and pass it all by Order-in-Council", declared W. J. Price (Cons, Toronto-Parkdale), after the government overruled Mr. Scott's amendments to Mr. Roebuck's Labor Legislation Measure. Goldwin Elgie (Cons., Toronto-Woodbine), tried to have the penalties raised for breach of voluntary wage and working hours agreements between employers and employees and Sam Lawrence (C.C.F., Hamilton East) wanted the Bill to provide for agreement regarding working conditions.

The meeting will be addressed by two noted anglers, Mr. Wm. Lang, past president of the Toronto Angler's Association and Mr. Thos. Jull of Toronto. Mr. Lang is an authority on fly and bait fishing and Mr. Jull is Dominion champion fly caster.

The directors expressed themselves as being glad to interest themselves in helping to attain the objects which the Angler's Club desires to bring about. Making this district a popular resort for anglers is one of the ideas the Chamber of Commerce has in mind towards attracting tourists.

Ald. Cushing in acknowledging the welcome extended to him by President J. B. Boyce spoke briefly on the accommodation provided for tourists in this city, and stated, that as chairman of the publicity committee in the city council he would be glad to receive from the Chamber of Commerce suggestions which could be adopted as a means of inducing more tourists to stop in Belleville.

Mayor Tice, who was prevented by other engagements from being present at the earlier part of the meeting, arrived later and in speaking briefly to the directors offered the assistance he possible could to the Chamber in effecting more tourists to this city and district.

Report is Given

Mr. E. V. Illsley gave a splendid report of the meeting of representatives of the Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade and other organizations in this district which was held in Belleville on Tuesday evening last and at which a Tourist Association for this district was enthusiastically formed, to be called the Bay of Quinte District Tourist Association. At this meeting it was the directors and members of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce to appoint a president and secretary for the association. On motion of Mr. Illsley, seconded by Mr. Springer, Mr. W. A. Parker, a past president of the Chamber was appointed to be the first president. The appointment of a secretary was left in abeyance.

It was the opinion of the directors, that Ald. Cushing, chairman of publicity in the city council and Ald. Arnott, chairman of industries in the council, should represent the city council in the activities of the tourist association.

President J. B. Boyce presided at the meeting and the following directors were present: H. E. Fairfield, W. C. Springer, E. P. Bernstein, E. V. Illsley, Lee D. Riggs, W. H. Morton and H. W. Ackerman. Mr. Ackerman, who has been absent for some time in Florida was welcomed back by his fellow directors.

CAPACITY CROWD AT THIRD DAY OF HYDRO SCHOOL

Mrs. McLean Demonstrates Art of Making Pastry

New ways with pies was the theme of the demonstration yesterday afternoon by Mrs. F. N. McLean, home economist with Sifto Salts, Ltd., who was greeted by a large audience at the Hydro Cooking Classes. This was the third day of the sessions and interest, far from abating, had grown so that seating room was at a minimum.

The variety of desserts prepared included a pie for those who cannot use white flour. Whole wheat flour was used and Mrs. McLean cautioned her hearers to remember her rule "never sift whole wheat flour." This extracts the bran and the best quality in the flour is removed. Other "don'ts" in connection with whole wheat flour are: "Don't use too much water" and "don't put left over pastry of this type in the refrigerator," keep it in the kitchen cupboard where it will be warm. The recipe was as follows:

Whole Wheat Pastry

3 cups flour
1 cup lard
1 teaspoon salt
1-2 cup cold water

When using whole wheat flour at any time, brown sugar should be used when sugar is called for in the recipe. Another hint given by Mrs. McLean was that those who found difficulty in making rich cookies would solve this problem by placing wax paper over and under the dough. It will then roll smoothly and the paper can be easily removed.

Filling For Pie

1 cup stoned and crushed dates
Scant 3-4 cup brown sugar
Yolks of three eggs
Salt
1 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Plain Pie Pastry

2 cups sifted flour
1-2 lb. lard
1-2 cup water
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoonful lemon juice

The addition of the lemon juice avoids the "lard" taste in some pastry.

Raisin Filling

1-2 cup flour
2 cups water
1-2 cup sugar
1 lb. raisins
Salt

Cheese Relish

The use of cheese and pastry makes a delicious number of tasty tidbits. Real old, nippy cheese should always be chosen. The pastry in this case was rolled thin covered with grated cheese, folded and rolled again. More cheese was added and the pastry was then rolled up and cut in a jelly roll.

Cheese straws may be made in one sheet if a marked for cutting before baking. Another use of cheese dainties was for serving with delicate bouillon soup. Cut bread two inches square, melt equal parts of butter and cheese, spread bread on all sides and place in a 400 degrees' oven for a few minutes until it is a golden brown.

Glorified Rice

1-2 cup rice cooked in about one quart of water. Put through steamer, letting cold water run through it to separate the kernels. Add 1-2 cup of sugar, pineapple, 1 heaping cup cream until shiny, add to mixture and chill in refrigerator. A cherry or such adds to the appearance of the dessert.

Refrigerator Cookies

Mrs. McLean talked informally as she worked giving splendid advice on problems that often confront the home maker. She discussed the features of Moffat electric stoves and their use. Mrs. McLean cautioned housewives to always be careful to use utensils large to cover the elements, otherwise heat is wasted.

Two cakes which caused exclamations of delight from the audience were the Maypole cake and the Ice Cream cake. The former was a simple genoise, iced and decorated in a novel way for a child's birthday party. A large candle was placed in the centre and from it were streamers of ribbon which were held by animal crackers which edged the cake and eight candles also encircled the cake. This cake was presented to the tiny girl who drew the ribbons first. Afternoon, little Miss Corinne Spring, 523 Charles Street.

The ice cream cake was also a sponge cake, cut into two layers with a filling of ice cream. Thick meringue was spread over the top and sides and then, to the astonishment of the audience, the cake, ice cream and all was popped into a very hot oven till the top was a golden brown. This cake tasted very hot as well as looked.

Mr. Everett Smith, at the conclusion of the demonstration, gave a splendid talk on the merits of the Moffat range and Kelvinator refrigerator and advised his hearers to buy electrical appliances only from firms which could service them.

The prizes for the afternoon were then drawn and afterwards many lingered to discuss electric cooking. Those who had won cooking prizes the previous day were unanimous in their praise of the skill of the charming lecturer, Mrs. McLean. Yesterday's prizes were won by:

Table Lamp—Mrs. Anna Barnes, Trent Road.

DAVISON—PALMATIER

Picton United Church was the setting of an interesting wedding last evening when Marjorie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Palmatier, Picton, became the bride of Mr. George Milton Davison, son of Mr. J. ## Women's Retreat At St. Michael's

The closing of the women's Retreat took place last evening in St. Michael's Church, terminating the two-day period attended by crowds of Devotions for women and girls of the parish. Rev. John Knox, S.J. of Toronto, conducted the Blessed Virgin. He indicated the great honour bestowed on her by selecting her as the Mother of His Divine Son, honoring her as we do but following the example set by Our Living Lord. Father Knox mentioned the many blessings showered in Holy Writ testifying to the large part played by the Mother of God in the divine plan of man's redemption. He stressed Mary's position to God's subjects in her behalf and spoke of the salutation of the Archangel Gabriel, who referred to her as "blessed amongst women." He developed at length the Mother of God especially in these days, when the example of purity set by the Virgin Mother is necessary to the world's guidance.

The reverend missioner gave the Papal Blessing and articles of reparation were made. Father Knox stressed the importance of membership in the League of the Sacred Heart. Solemn Benediction of Blessed Sacrament given by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Leary aided as deacon and Rev. J. J. Collins as sub deacon.

Masses this morning were celebrated at six, seven, eight and nine o'clock. At the eight o'clock Mass the children sang several hymns. The Retreat will open again at seven-thirty tonight.

W. J. DOAK, LANSDOWNE IS ALLOWED APPEAL

Toronto, April 12—(CP)— The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal of W. J. Doak, farmer of Lansdowne 10 miles east of Gananoque, against the judgment of Mr. Justice J. A. McFarland awarding $1,317 damages to Charles H. Mallory, Gananoque auditor, $600.00 to Janet Millar and $100 to Catherine Millar.

The action arose out of an accident 11 miles east of Gananoque last August 30, when plaintiff's car ran into Doak's which was in a stationary position, diagonally across the highway. Mr. Justice W. N. Hodgins, delivering the judgment of the Appeal Court today, found the accident was mainly due to the defective condition of plaintiff's own car.

"Flirtation Walk"

First Military Musical Co-Stars Powell—Ruby Keeler

Bringing with it the enchantment of Hawaiian nights, the spirit of the United States Army, the thrill of West Point and the romance of glorious youth, "Flirtation Walk," first military musical ever screened and Warner Bros. mammoth new spectacle is scheduled to open at the Belle Tuesday (Saturday) for a three day run, with a matinee daily.

Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, the screen's most popular lovers, and Pat O'Brien and Ross Alexander are featured, in addition to a score of Hollywood's best actors, the entire cadet corps of the United States Military Academy at West Point, a portion of the U.S. Pacific fleet, and a detachment of the regular army at Honolulu.

"Flirtation Walk" is said to be an entirely new departure in film musicals. For there is a hodge podge of jokes and gags around which to base some songs and introduce dance numbers, the startlingly original "Flirtation Walk" within distinctish "Flirtation Walk" are incidental to, and a definite part of the plot theme.

The first big specialty is the Hawaiian Fantasy, in which a group of beautiful native girls clad in pahu leaves, and as many stalwart sailors from the fleet, in grass shirts handed down for generations on the enchanted islands of the Pacific Ocean are now on the screen for the first time and indulge their natural love for love dance, the Luau, the Hula-Kui and-hi-ulu.

Dick Powell sings his Hawaiian songs written by Sol Hoopii, accompanied by Hoopii's own band, to the accompaniment of Hoopii's famous orchestra. For the cameras Warner Bros. constructing the biggest exterior sets they have ever attempted.

Another big specialty is the West Point number, actually photographed at the Academy, in which members of the cast stage the traditional "Hundredth Night Play", which is made a play within the plot.

"Flirtation Walk" is the beautiful girls are seen in this number with Dick Keeler and Dick Powell and Dick Powell singing three new and catchy airs written by the famous team of songsters, Allie Wrubel and Mort Dixon, collaborating, and Mrs. is the Name", the title song "Flirtation Walk", and "No Horse No Wife, No Baby."

Dick Powell has the role of a plebe, assigned to the cavalry, and is assigned as chauffeur to a visiting General's daughter, played by Ruby Keeler. Failing in love with the islands, the girl leads her handsome chauffeur into a series of adventures which culminate at the Love Festival where he is set upon by native dances and songs, and the magic of the moon and sandy beach, light draws the young couple instinctively into each other's arms.

They are married and the newlyweds spend a part played by John Eldredge.

The romance fires Dick with the love for Ruby Keeler, but it is not on an equal footing with the girl he loves. It is not until about time for his graduation that Dick Powell wins her, however, and then he finds that the young lieutenant is a real rival. After a series of stirring adventures in which it appears the girl is going to marry the lieutenant, the story winds up in a smashing climax.

Frank Borzage, Hollywood's ace director, is responsible for the glowing romance of glorious youth with its charmingly innocent setting, the action taken in Hawaii and West Point.

"Babes at Sea" a gorgeous reel in full beautiful Technicolor, the Belle Last News of the World and a clever topical reel will be exhibited on the same program. Kim Maynard and his orchestra furnish music in the thrilling adventure story "The Mystery Mountain" and a specialty act at the Saturday matinee performance.

Two Features Tonight

Gracie Allen, George Burns, Dixie Lee and the screen's most popular Senor Joe Morrison are appearing at the Belle Tonight for the last time in "Love in Bloom". Warner Bros. the thrill hit "I am a Thief", the starring Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez is the second feature offering on the same program.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Jealousy"

A Gripping and Romantic Drama of the Prize Fight Ring

An unusual cast of screen notables, with the favorite ex-prize fighting champions will be seen in "Jealousy", a thrilling romantic drama now showing at the Capitol theatre.

Headed by carrot-topped Nancy Carroll, the imposing cast includes the screen's own Donald Cook and Arthur Hohl; George Murphy, Inez Courtney and Raymond Walburn. Jack Dempsey and Jack Renault and Lee Ramage, Pacific Coast heavyweight champion and contender for the world's championship, form the prize ring.

The film revolves about the dramatic experiences of George Murphy as a boxing championship contender. He enters the ring for his most important battle distracted by an engagement with Nancy Carroll scheduled for the same night. As he turns to look for the girl at the ringside, a well-placed boxers him for the count.

He revives in his dressing room to find himself a defeated man. He is disheartened by his loss and the heart, marries her, and again quarrels when he thinks she is untrue to him. In a moment of rage he kills the suspected man. His wife takes the blame for the crime on her own life, and is about to be convicted when the conscious-smitten fighter confesses his guilt at the trial. The surprise climax is one of the most dramatic ever to be injected into a motion picture.

Lee Ramage is seen in several scenes as the manager of George Murphy. Others in the cast are Dave Durand, Robert Allen and Josephine Whittell.

"Redhead"

Circumstantial evidence is often the cause of the downfall of anyone who is lonely and all alone in a big city, but not so with Grace Hartley, as clearly shown in the role in "Redhead".

With the odds against her, and all her former artist friends gone as the result of the scandal that is attached to her name following the death of a visitor to her studio, Miss Hartley, as the character, meets Ted Brown, played by Ralph Bellamy, a youth to come to town, who is threatened with disinheritance by his father.

Ted Brown, with a flame a plot to get some money from Mr. Brown by posing compromising with Miss Hartley. Dale finds that she cannot go through with it, but instead enters into a plot to get the best of Ted Brown from the pitfalls that confront him.

This situation furnishes the many moments of pathos, as well as humorous incidents that make a happy reconciliation to all concerned.

Adapted from the novel by Vera Brown, this clever depiction of the struggle of modern youth to make a foothold in the world, was directed by Melville Brown and includes the splendid cast of Chirchill, Regis Toomey, Monte Blue, Gertrude Michael, Ralph Macon and Ross Stafford.

Capitol News Reel will be shown at each performance. Last complete show 8.30.

Tomorrow Only

"Tailspin Tommy", Hal Forrest's great comic strip, and the thrilling serial of the skyways, starring Maurice Murphy, Patricia Farr and Noah Beery, Jr.

REV. W. HARRISON CONDUCTS SERVICE AT TWEED CHURCH

Mr. John Hall Addresses Tweed Horticultural Society

Tweed—In the absence of Rev. R. J. Nicholson, pastor of Tweed United Church, the service on Sunday morning was conducted by Rev. W. D. Harrison, retired United Church minister of Belleville, who addressed a large congregation on the theme "The Faithfulness of God". The speaker based his remarks particularly on the twenty-fifth verse of Jeremiah, chapter 33. The Old Testament there are many references to God's faithfulness to his people. Jehovah's promise that David's descendants should reign forever has been abundantly fulfilled. God's promise that Abraham's seed should be as numerous as the sands of the seashore and should reign over much land was fulfilled in the Twelve Tribes and their descendants. The Father urged his audience to accept all of God's promises at their face value and so obtain a deeper spiritual life.

The evening service at Tweed United Church was withdrawn on Sunday.

Mrs. W. H. Richardson returned home on Saturday after five weeks spent in Kingston General Hospital following a serious operation. Her condition is somewhat improved.

Miss Myrtle Foster, B. A., teacher of Frankford Continuation School, was married on Saturday between the Hydro-Electric Power Commission Chairman and Councillor congratulated today awaited the royal assent and proclamation of the Ontario Legislature. Mr. Councell before it becomes law.

The reading was given the measure by a vote of 57-17 last night, as cheers from Government members and Government members thumped triumphantly on their desks.

In the final summation of the Government's position in charge of the reading of the Bill, Attorney-General Arthur W. Roebuck told the House: "I am glad to be able to say for with the power companies and world that the Government is going to serve their interests, while protecting our people first."

The Ontario commons involved are: Beauharnois, MacLaren - Quebec, Ontario Valley and Gatineau Power Companies. They have contracts with the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission for huge blocks of power over a period of 40 years. In addition to claiming the contracts void, illegal and unenforceable, Attorney General Roebuck said they constituted a menace to the province of Ontario with an unfair burden of debt. The contracts were entered into during the boom years preceding the financial collapse of 1929.

The vote last night terminated one of the most spectacular controversies placed on legislation ever introduced in the Ontario Legislature. Opposition members, in their opposition to block second reading, instituted the first snap division since 1919. The vote was 57 to 17. The filibuster lasted 26 hours. The House continued to sit throughout the hours after that, setting a Provincial record for marathon debate and business.

The Government stood solidly behind Premier Hepburn, with all block efforts of the Conservatives were surmounted. The Bill was introduced by the Premier.

SHIP GOES DOWN ELEVEN ARE LOST

Seven Reach Shore to Tell of The Tragedy

Kingston, Jamaica, April 12—(CP)—Seven survivors of a sailing vessel reached the toe of a Caribbean storm that sent a freighter plunging southward to the bottom 12 miles offshore.

Under darkness shut down, nine seamen of the Norwegian steamship Haymoor were missing and feared dead. Only seven of her crew had reached land to tell of sudden disaster of a ship with death on the tropical sea, and of rescue when hope had all but vanished.

For more than two days five of the survivors had drifted about the sea in a leaking piece of flotsam watching death snatch shipmates away from their sides, certain that they would not come.

For the second time the other pair had stood together on a wave-lapped reef 90 miles offshore, searching the horizon vainly for rescuers, and growing weaker from hunger thirst and exposure to the blazing sun.

More than 48 hours before boats picked them up their ship had gone to the bottom off Jamaica's Portland Point as she steamed from Black River, Jamaica, toward Venice with a cargo of logwood.

The 2,500-ton freighter, just 19 months old, was in charge of Master Arnold Captain Albert Knutsen of Oslo, Norway, one of the two who survived. Nine of her crew had served seven men for a life raft. The other was Second Engineer Eilert Hansen.

Death must have come more quickly to those of the missing men. Many were below decks, according to the survivors, when the mercury ran into the gale Tuesday morning.

Federal Trade Commission

Ottawa, April 12 (CP)—Creation of a Federal trade and industry commission, with wide powers of law enforcement, supervision of business and suppression of unfair, unethical commercial practices, and the prevention of combines, was announced in the Throne Speech Commission.

It would be a Commission of five men, operating directly under the Prime Minister in somewhat the same way as the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners.

"We have been forced by the evidence," the speech stated, "to conclude the situation calls for a body specially equipped for the purpose of more state intervention in business."

Powers of Commission

The Trade Commission would be empowered to:

1. Enforce the Combines Act to retain and restore competition.

2. Regulate industrial monopolies, where open competition cannot or should not be restored, if industry would be declared monopolistic, exempted from the operation of the Combines Act and automatically come within the supervision of the Trade Commission.

2. Sanction and supervise agreements between industries while modifying cut-throat competitive practices.

4. Prohibit unfair competitive practices.

5. Supervise or co-operate in advertising, grading and standardizing merchandising and business practice for which no agency exists.

6. Establish courts to protect consumers.

7. Regulate security issues for the protection of the investor.

8. Co-operate with the members of Commerce and Boards of Trade in development of commercial arbitration machinery to settle industrial disputes.

9. Co-operate with other government agencies, Federal Provincial or Municipal, in solution of trade problems.

Advisory Capacity

The Trade Commission also would have an advisory function, not only to the government but to industry. For instance, it would recommend to the government the recognition or revocation of special monopolies. It could recommend also to the government that certain parts of the industrial self-government in special situations, but the only step the Commission turned thumbs down on this method of economic management is a general price-fixing.

The Trade Commission would come in close touch with industry, advising about elimination of unethical trade practices. It would have power to investigate the organization and practices of any industry.

Monopoly

The Price Spreads Commission ended its report with this warning:

"We recommend, that is to say, not only the most comprehensive assurance or reservation of competition, where that is possible, but also gradual, progressive, and if necessary, regulation in that growing field of business organization in which monopoly or imperfect competition will continue inevitably to develop. If that be neglected, will continue to exploit the primary producer, the wage-earner, and the consumer, and the shameful ways so often disclosed by the evidence will continue.

"We propose the first steps to the goal that has been in view since the 'socialisation' of monopoly and the civilization of competition.' Unless we can achieve that goal in a reasonably near future, there may well be forced upon us changes in our economic, social, and political organization beside which the proposals, important as we believe them to be, will pale into insignificance."

The Trade Commission the Trade Commission would be concerned with the prevention or regulation of industrial monopolies. Existence of State-recognized and State-regulated monopolies would be something new for Canada.

War On Unethical Practices

The Price Spreads Commission recommended wholesale and retail policy in fighting and regulating combines and unethical business practices.

Another duty of the Trade Commission would be modification and simplification of standards. One of its members would be chairman of a subsidiary board for this purpose.

One of the general duties of the Trade Commission would be to act as a central body to administer laws designed to protect consumers and to receive complaints on unbalanced scales.

Business Practices

The Price Spreads Commission did not attempt to define unfair business practices which the Trade Commission will attempt to control. It did commend, however, prohibition of discriminatory accounts, rebates and allowances; territorial price discrimination and predatory price-cutting.

When the Trade Commission found a business practice unfair, it would order it stopped. If the order was disobeyed, the manufacturer could be prosecuted and a court injunction obtained.

"We did not anticipate," the report stated, "the immediate abolition of all practices alleged to be unfair, but many of the suggestions made to the evidence seem unwise in policy and impossible to administer. But we are strongly of the opinion the Commission must be given the maximum possible power, practically in the light of experience, to develop sound policies and effective methods for the complete suppression of the evils of unfair trade practices."

Toronto, April 12.—(CP)—In a letter published today in the Journal of the Catholic Register, Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne again protest the Ontario legislative enactment, that makes their quintuplet daughters wards of the King.

livestock, would arbitrate on disputes between producers and processors, license and supervise the operation of truckers, inspect marketing conditions and collect statistics. Establish a balanced production and consumer orderly marketing, work for the improvement of stock, develop markets, stabilize supplies and seek fair returns for the producer.

Reviewing the evidence, the Commissioners noted during the depression years the returns to the primary producer had fallen 34.8 per cent, while those of the packers had dropped only 24.5 per cent. "This indicates," says the majority "reduced that the livestock producers suffered almost more heavily than the packing companies."

The manner in which the packing houses have been able to protect their margins had a direct relation "to the monopolistic character of the industry's structure."

Livestock Prices

"The dominant position of the two large companies (Canada Packers and Swift Canadian) has undoubtedly secured for them some measure of control over both market prices and selling prices for their product. While there is no direct evidence of collusion as between these two companies, we are not prepared to say that the majority of the Commissioners, "that prices have been subject to the same fluctuations as those of others. If not a more generally competitive field," they add, "the losses and the profit losses in two out of the last five years, but Canada Packers came through with a profit each year.

"We cannot, therefore, escape the conclusion that the latter is due to the continued prosperity of Canada Packers, Ltd. During the depression years and particularly in the management of relative freedom from competition which has operated to the detriment of the primary producers."

Selling End of Business

With regard to the selling aspect of the business, the majority Commissioners found a broader competition between the packing companies was exercised on the business of the small merchant and that as a result of a predatory nature. Evidence had shown Canada Packers selling to different merchants in the same area at different prices. In dealing with large accounts, Canada Packers, Mr. Young said, engaged in by the packing houses.

Special allowances to department stores to find customers largely for the small independent butcher being unfair discrimination.

Secret Concessions

"The worst feature of this price discrimination is the secret nature of the concessions granted. This prevents the small butcher known how great an advantage his more favored competitor has through purchasing his supplies from the common supplier, the packer."

Thought the packing industry should be given its due consideration in weathering the depression, average profits over the years 1929 and 1933 inclusive, were only 2.3 per cent on the capital of $23.25 a week; the Hull, Que. plant was operating at the lowest average, $15.89 a week.

Low Wages Cited

While this industry was not so bad as some others in the matter of wages, nevertheless the Commissioners found the "worst sweating" was in the concern paying even a minority of its workers wages as low as some flats were known in one plant of the largest and most profitable members of the industry.

Turning to the producers end of the matter, the Commissioners found that lack of co-operation among packers was due to the elimination of the farmer's co-operative company and the wholesale butcher, either by packer absorption or by "cut-throat competition." The industry was concentrated in "very few hands."

Canada Packers was the dominating factor in the industry, packing more than the other five packing houses combined. The producer suffered financially, the Commissioners' buyers had been charged in the interests of the packer uncontradicted, the report said.

Direct Shipment

Direct shipment by truckers from the farmer to the packers had increased tremendously in recent years since the producer had to accept packers' own weights and grade.

The Commissioners recommended all shipments of livestock should be made to the public market, where payment would depend on the delivered, sales competition and supervision and inspection were in the public yards. It was also urged that the Dominion Government should fix and to sell stock by section on the public stockyards, they be enabled to do so.

The report went into many phases of the big industry and recommended that sale of hogs by fixed live weight separate at whatever differentials be discontinued, with the exception of the premium or deficits. Each grade of hogs should be sold separately at whatever price it may bring.

AFRAID TO GO TO BED

Woman's Dread of Rheumatic Pains

THANKS KRUSCHEN FOR RELIEF

The effect of rheumatism upon this woman is a peculiar one. She is so dreaded the coming of night that she becomes her at night that she was afraid to go to bed. She tells of her experiences in the letter published below:

"I have been suffering from rheumatism for years. At one time I couldn't walk with a cane on my feet. The thumb of my left hand was set stiff. I could only bend it with the aid of the right hand. I was afraid to go to bed, as my right hand and arm up to the elbow used to go numb, and the pain was just terrible until I got the circulation going again. I started to take a half-teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before each meal, and believe me I feel a different woman. I tell everyone what I take, and how good it has done me."—(Mrs.) W. A. R.

The pains of rheumatism are caused by deposits of needle-pointed uric acid crystals in the muscles and joints. The most effective solvents of these crystal deposits are the salts contained in Kruschen Salts contains sodium salts, which dissolve the uric acid crystals in the muscles and joints. The other salts which bring a double action to bear in dissolving the uric acid crystals. These other salts contained in a half-teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts are of such water below and you will believe me I feel a different woman. I tell everyone what I take, and how good it has done me."—(Mrs.) W. A. R.

LOWERED TARIFFS NEED, SAYS YOUNG

The Imperial Tobacco Company, Limited, Mr. Young continued, dominated the retailing field and it had been agreed with independent store keepers to display its goods to the best advantage. "If these terms were true, Mr. Young suggested the customs duty on cigarettes (-21 a thousand), be reduced, and cigarettes to secure supplies abroad.

Wales at Orangeville Sun

The milling and baking industry also was a victim of "unfair competition," Mr. Young found but its biggest difficulties came from lost foreign markets.

He condemned the practice on the part of Canadian wheat pools in world prices which he said forced English millers to cut down their purchases. "The hope of the industry," he summed up, "lies in preventing the import of unfair goods. Failing that, it would appear that some mills have to close down permanently."

Turning to the agricultural implement industry, Mr. Young welcomed the increase in prices in the United States. He believed a reduction in tariffs might cut the cost of iron and steel.

Market Necessary

Canada's livestock problem was one of a market, Mr. Young said, because production exceeded domestic requirements. He suggested co-operation to find foreign markets, particularly American.

"It is time that the packers for the low prices of livestock," Mr. Young said.

Although one large company handles 59 percent and another 24 per cent of the packing house business, there was no evidence of monopoly in the industry." He opposed establishing a livestock board because it would be expensive and little — if any — good to foreign markets.

The industry 'report condemned the recommendation of prohibiting truckers from selling cattle that they had taken to the farmer's own business.

The textile tariffs were condemned by Mr. Young as they would be raised 29.00 per cent from the United States, although it was not far from the rest of the world. The industry, he said, had not recognized its obligations to the consumer as a result of its tariff advantages.

"This raises the question — whether this (tariff) industry is not costing us too much," said Mr. Young. "If the people of Canada are required to pay $1.64 for a dollar's worth of textiles that could and Canadian workers may receive $1.00 for it, the industry is not what it is equal to 24.21 per cent of the selling price of the products) in Canada, it seems to be a losing proposition and we might be better off if we left the three principal lines to do nothing and import our textiles."

3 COMMISSIONERS FLATLY DISAGREE WITH SOME VIEWS

that pool would be served by compulsory grading of cattle for domestic markets.

Shipments to Packers

Direct shipment of livestock to packers should be subject to the same grading and inspection as that applying to the public pens. They also doubted if any benefit would accrue from changes in the method of remunerating commission agents.

In the opinion of the three the majority report overstressed the monopolistic character of the Canadian packing industry. They were opposed to any attempt to interfere with the marketing of Canadian bacon on the British market as likely to create resentment against the Canadian product.

The Liberals could not concur in all findings relating to Mass Buying. Their report found:

"First, by reason of certain economies it has effected, the wide-scale merchandising has won for itself a definite place in the important place in our economic system. Sympathy for those individuals injured or displaced by this development should not obscure the net gain which has resulted from the application of improved business methods in merchandising generally. Second, while there may be better credit control, better accounting methods, and other changes in practice which, these centre around the gradual disappearance of the personal factor in business.

"Third, despite this, great change there is, strong evidence that, in the field of merchandising, independent trade still, so cherished that, even in modern life, it remains a definite place for efficient individual merchants.

Limit to Large Organizations

"Fourth, the great growth of chain and departmental stores during our period of prosperity, there seems to be no reasonable ground for the fear a small group of large organizations will control the entire field. Large-scale organizations anywhere, has expanded in a field still relatively so little subject to standardization of product and service, and personal factor in business.

"Finally, mass merchandising has thrown into clear light abuses in some cases has indeed certain practices, for example, that these price discrimination, secret and discriminatory rebates, loss leaders and sometimes used, unsated advertising allowances, and discriminatory free deals, are, we agree, unfair to the economic sense; others such as deceptive packaging, misleading advertising, and short weighting are unfair in the critical sense.

We conclude, then, that feel that such condemnation need not, or should not, be applied to mass merchandising, as such."

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

For a moment the older man sat as though sitting stopping from the day, he reached up, and patted Nora's head.

"Then and I have important things to go over, dear. So I'll leave you now. But tomorrow," he added, "tomorrow we'll talk again of all those plans of ours." He looked into her eyes, newly lit with happiness. "There's always a rainbow, little Nora," he smiled, and climbed into Sant's car. In another moment they were headed toward the desert.

For a moment Nora watched them. Then turning toward Lolita she waved and throwing her own car into gear, made for the ranch. Reggie and Hazel were already in the road, the little car responding to the lilting rhythm that was singing in her heart. For to her it seemed, as she flashed along, that all the world and all her life had changed, as if at last the burden of those past anxieties, the dread, the hopelessness had suddenly cleared away, and she was riding again toward Dick and toward a new day. On she hastened. The scattered huts of Agua Verde fell behind and before her stretched the cactus dotted desert. But suddenly her foot reached for the brake, for ahead of her, beneath the glinting afternoon sun she saw the rising dust of many riders, and driving by the roadside, she waited while a band of horsemen trotted slowly nearer. Leading them, she made out the almost powerful figure of Dick and her brother.

A strange rendezvous. In the center rode two score of Sant's followers mostly Mexicans and vaqueros with surrounding them, rifles in their scabbards, sternly watching, the ranchers of Verde guarded their advance. At a little distance they halted, and Dick rode to Nora's side.

Yet even before she spoke he sensed the change that had come over her, for her eyes were sparkling. That veil of aloofness, that sense of vague estrangement had gone, and watching her he decided not to speak of Red to her. Now was a much better time.

Curiously her eyes still dwelt up, on the band of horsemen, then again she turned toward Dick.

"The leaders of Sant's band," he said. "Today the Eastbound train carries them away from Verde. But tomorrow the border country will be in the hands of men who made it, and Sant's rule will be ended."

"You're sending them away?"

"This afternoon. If they are wise they'll stay away. One hour ago we loaded them up at the ranch and picked out every one of Sant's chief men. We gave them their choice, and the train is accepting sentence from the Guardians of the Desert." With a short smile he added "Most of them chose the train."

Barnes had joined them, his face careworn and anxious.

"Better go back to the ranch, Nora," he advised. "There is still a chance for trouble here. We'll have to stand guard over this outfit until the train pulls out. There must be no mob violence when we reach Verde."

"And then?" she asked, "then you will both be content to cut to the ranch?"

Barnes was silent; but Dick shook his head. "Then," he answered slowly, "I have a meeting lang over due with Nick Sant."

She started. "But Sant left Verde less than an hour ago."

"Which way?"

"Toward El Toro. And Dick, your father was with him."

"Dad?"

"He arrived today. I only knew it this morning when he wired me to meet him at the station. I drove him down to the Mexican Quarter and there he met Sant."

"What did he say?"

"Only that he wished to talk with him on important things—things having to do with the irrigation company. They got into their car and Sant heard Sant tell your father there would be horses for them at the entrance to the canyon."

The two men looked at each other. What do you make of it?" Barnes asked at last.

"I can't be sure. Perhaps Dad has come out to join forces with Sant again to save the day," and thoughtfully Dick looked at the silent ranks of horsemen, still closely guarded. "Well, he can't do it. He can't save the day this time. Within five hours these men will be gone."

For a moment he meditated, then as if thinking aloud, he repeated, "Gone to El Toro with Sant. I don't like it." Then, as his glance rested on characteristic of the man he raised his head.

"Will, I want you to take these men in to Agua Verde as they are, catch the train. I'm riding up to El Toro."

But Barnes, too, had made his own decision. "You're not going alone—not this time," he answered with finality, and he called to Red-Mike Shayne. "Red, you'll ride as sound for El Toro. We've just heard that Sant and Solon Lowell have left. We'll let you take charge of the Guardian's and see that this affair is put aheard the train!"

The big blonde man nodded. "I'll guarantee they get aboard. You wouldn't it be safer for some of the boys to go with you?"

Dick shook his head. "El Toro has been deserted for days, and only horses can travel faster than a dozen. Barnes and I will cut out across the desert and be up there soon after Sant."

As he gathered the reins, Nora reached out and for a moment her hand closed on his. "You'll be careful, Dick?"

Their eyes held for a moment, and for the first time in the day his somber face lighted. Then very gently he nodded, and as the girl's hand dropped from his he turned his mare out toward the blazing desert.

For two men rode silently, stirrup to stirrup, keeping their horses at a steady, easy pace, careful not to tire them, saving their strength for the last steep climb up Diablo Canyon. As the sun sank Barnes looked anxiously at his friend, fearing that after the gruelling hardships of the past week the long day might be trying him too severely. But Dick sat his horse erect and firm, showing no signs of either strain or fatigue, and Barnes knew that behind the level gaze and firm, set jaw lay the answers to many accounts to be squared at last.

Steadily they plodding across the dry, rustling sands, while with increasing foreboding, Barnes found himself speculating on Solon Lowell's presence up that Canyon. Did it mean that once united with Sant, Lowell felt he could yet turn the tide of victory? The old warrior had never known defeat, and it might well be that, embittered by the success of Dick's return, he had come out to personally lead the battle, to bring all of his force—his wealth, his prestige, his influence—over the political powers of the state—to hurl them against the Guardians and against the men who had followed his son in crushing the reign of Sant. Barnes realized, with a piercing clearness that in driving Sant's band from the canyon the Guardians had again stepped outside the law. And more than once he wanted to voice those thoughts to the man who rode tirelessly at his side, but Dick seemed detached, unaware of the other's presence that Barnes said no word.

The sun was already dipping westward when they approached the narrow gash in the Mexican hills that formed the Canyon of el Diablo, and where Sant and Dick saw Sant's empty car drawn up in a small shade. In the doorway a peon gazed with shaded eyes up at the two horsemen.

"We are looking for Senor Sant," Dick called in rapid Spanish. "Has he gone this way?"

"Less than a half hour ago, Senor. It is true. He keeps his horse."

"Was anyone with him?"

"An older man, Senor. He rides my own pinto. They were in haste."

With a nod to Barnes, Dick pointed to the fresh tracks before them, then wheeled and at a gallop clattered up the canyon.

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX

At the other end of that rocky trail Solon Lowell and Nick Sant were nearing Headquarters House in Coyote and several hours before them on the hilltop, the tightly closed shutters eloquent of desertion, and even beneath the bright rays of the sun an air of foreboding seemed to hover about its weatherbeaten walls.

Sant glanced quickly to the post outside, cast run up the porch steps, unlocked the door and entered, while close behind him Lowell followed.

From the twilight entered through a broken shutter, and lighting a match Sant lit the way to creaking steps. Pausing before a door where a little light had been lately placed, he drew from his pocket a key. The door opened on creaking hinges, and entering first Sant struck a light on a wooden table and lighted a small oil lamp.

Lowell looked about him. The room was without windows, its walls and floor of rough, unfinished boards. In a far corner a cot stood, and gazing at it Sant took a pair of cigars from the top drawers and laid them on the table.

"A smoke will rest you after that journey they are aboard," he told Lowell. "You might admiring the way you stood that long climb after not being in the saddle for months."

In silence Lowell took a cigar, and biting off the end, lighted it.

"I have stood much in the last two years," he answered, and his steel grey eyes were cold and unfriendly, "it to discuss a few of those things I am here for. Let us get down."

There in the flickering lamplight of that inner room these two conspirators sat down, their eyes watchful and alert, the smoke of their cigars rising slowly on the air.

When at last Lowell spoke, his voice had lowered to a deep rumble. "I've been going pretty thoroughly into our affairs with Senor Barnes out here," he began, "and I've had some inquiries made." For a moment he looked at the cigar, then he said slowly, "So that survey of yours was a diamond lie."

"You mean—"

"That words were lost in the crash of Lowell's fist on the table. "I mean you used my name for a gigantic swindle. You lied to me just as you lied to all the Verde countryside. Those engineers were under the protection of the Guardians were brought out by my orders, and their first report was made to me. There never was a ghost's chance of bringing a ditch over those hills—and you know it!"

Sant's face bit into the cigar. "When I learned that, I went further back. You've a little careless in your accounts, Nick. Three years ago I gave you fifty thousand dollars of Verde's upper ranch's fund. I learn now that you got it for thirty thousand."

Coldly, contemptuously, he looked at his guest. Well, the game was over at the gutter to bring you wealth and power here in the border country from the Eastern money lords who had followed you in crushing the reign of Sant. Barnes realized, with a piercing clearness that in driving Sant's band from the canyon the Guardians had again stepped outside the law. And more than once he wanted to voice those thoughts to the man who rode tirelessly at his side, but Dick seemed detached, unaware of the other's presence that Barnes said no word.

BROWN BOMBER MEETS LAZER

Louis Figures it Another Step to Fight With Champion

Chicago, April 13—A 21-year-old Jewish heavyweight, Roy Lazer of Detroit, will attempt to defeat the champion of the world, Joe Louis, brown bomber of Detroit, in a 10-round battle in Chicago Stadium tomorrow night.

Not a man in boxing, with the exception of Lazer himself, figures he has a chance of achieving something that seventeen other heavyweights have failed to do. Lazer, undefeated in 25 professional bouts, is confident Louis is overrated and that he is capable of polishing off the outstanding ring upset of the year. That is, according to what he would be if he succeeds in defeating the Detroit negro, who in his short career has conquered all comers.

Lazer expects to enter the ring near the 165-pound notch, which will give him practically an even chance with Louis for the weights.

Supporting the bout is a 10-round semi-windup involving Pete Bastagilla, Winnipeg middleweight, and Al Diamond of Newark, N.J., the latter having power has sank Bastagilla to the canvas and made him the favorite over the Jersey man.

Max Baer, world's heavyweight champion, will be sitting at the ringside, trying to cheer his brother Buddy home in a tough spot, and also will take a look at Louis, who looks like a million dollars to Baer. Max figures Buddy will be going in a four-rounder against Norm Griffith, a fairly capable heavyweight of Georgia.

Sudbury Wolves Even Series Defeat Monarchs in 2nd Game

Forced Third Game For Junior Crown at Winnipeg

Winnipeg, April 12. —(CP)—A quick-thinking, puck-following pack of Cub Wolves from Sudbury connected hockey magic here last night. In a dazzling exhibition they erased a one-game deficit by defeating Winnipeg Monarchs 7-2 in the second of a best-of-three game series for the Canadian junior amateur championship. Monarchs won the first game, 7-6, and the third and deciding game will be played on Saturday night.

Game Late in Starting

The game was held up fifteen minutes, and weary spectators greeted the teams with applause. Hillier picked the puck up the face-off and passed out to Stuart. The Wolves' centre took the return pass and lined a hard drive at Gauthier.

Prokaski, Monarch pivot man, missed a perfect centre from the ten foot in front of the cage. Shannon led a raid on the Winnipeg net, but the drive was stopped. Teaming up with Stuart, the Wolves' defence flash passed to the left-winger, who slapped the rubber past Gauthier in the fifth minute.

Combination plays of the Easterners were taking them into Monarchs defense area.

Stuart scored a tripping penalty and Wolves were a man short. Field faced in with Prokaski, but the play was offside. Keenan evened the count when he scored on Prokaski's passout from in front of the Wolves cage.

Barker was penalized for tripping Stuart. Shannon and Stuart again raced in on Gauthier, and the Wolves' left-winger shot the rubber into the Winnipeg net for the Easterners second goal. Shannon, through again seconds later, but Gauthier made a wonderful stop.

Monarchs were boring in on Kemp at the close of the period, but a Sudbury defense held the margin secure.

Winnipeg Player is Injured

Belanger was in the penalty box as the period started. He was banished for high-sticking as the first period ended. Hillier went in as Belanger came out.

Monarchs' front line broke away Krol picked up his own rebound to beat Kemp, and tie the score just before Hillier returned. Stuart plied the Wolves in the lead when he whipped a high shot into the Monarch cage from just inside the Manitoba blue line.

Martel was taken from the game with an injured leg when he crashed into the boards behind the Monarchs' net, Hiller and Field were banished for bumping.

Martel was back. Hiller and Field returned. Kemp was brought to his knees when Barker and Prokaski eluded Shannon and Swanson. Shannon broke through twice on the Monarch net, but hit Gauthier's pad each time.

Martel and Grosso were given penalties. Cool, poised and the Eastern defense, but Kemp turned his shot aside. On the second rush Field was through, but again Kemp saved. Shannon was penalized during the last minute of play.

Sudbury Sums up Score

Grosso went back on Sudbury's rear-guard as Swanson re-entered the penalty box. Monarchs tried a power-play, but Krol was short on a backhand pass to Keenan. Krol lined a high puck that hit Kemp's chest pad.

Monarchs rallied around Kemp in the Sudbury net and the Sudbury netman made three nice saves. Martel made a perfect pass in front of Kemp, but it went begging. The Easterners packed their defense as the Manitobans raced in. Krol received a penalty for highsticking Grosso.

Hiller raced through the Monarchs' defense and beat Gauthier with a shot from the right wing. Hiller and Stuart broke through a minute later, but Hiller overskated the puck.

The Wolves were shooting the puck up the ice midway in the period and Monarchs were given no chance to take advantage of Stuart's absence.

MAY BE PLAYOFF AROUND EASTER

Canadian Champs Will Play Chicago Team in Atlantic City

Halifax, April 12 —(CP)—"I wouldn't consider it," President E. A. Gilroy of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association declared last night when he was informed President W. Robson, Chairman of the Hockey Committee of the United States Amateur Athletic Union was planning to communicate on the desire of the American body to play an international hockey championship series in New York next November.

Stating he had heard nothing officially about the plan from the U.S.A.A.U., President Gilroy said he had not given the matter any thought. He did not, however, see how such a plan would be possible so early in the hockey season, because there were few games in Canada that could whip themselves into condition at that time.

It was planned last year when the International Olympic Committee championship from Detroit White Stars at Toronto to make the series an annual affair, to be staged at the completion of the Allan Cup championships in Canada.

This year it was planned to hold the international games in New York, but unusual factors combined to make it impossible to declare Canada champions before April 17. Rinks at New York, Chicago and Boston will be unavailable at that time.

President Gilroy sent a communication to Chairman Robson today stating the C.A.H.A. would be willing to send a team to play off with Chicago Babe Ruths, United States champions, at Atlantic City "around Easter."

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

The advent of warmer breezes has turned the heads of local sportsmen to out-of-doors activities these past few days. The horseshoe tossers are nightly busy over behind the jail-yard, while softballers have been working out with regularity all week. Up at the Belleville Collegiate Institute, the athletes resurrected the jumping standards with the result that the annual B.C.I. field and track meet is not so far off the calendar as it has been for many years. The event in the month of May. Don Thomas' "rifle Frowines" have forsaken hockey for baseball and challenge any baseball nine in the world at least that is their story. Of course such challenges can be attributed to the spring fever, or sumpin'.

Charlie Tebworth's College Hill Cubs are apparently getting the jump on the other softball teams in the city as the Cubs have been out to pre-season work outs for the past few days. Charlie Island's entering the College Hill "mushballers" in the Wall Street League, that opens the latter part of May, together with the Aajmaa Club, Alemites and S.E.A.C. Which, on the subject of softball, the O.A.S.A. is to hold its annual meeting in Toronto on April 17. Rinks at New York, Chicago and Boston will be unavailable at that time.

President Gilroy sent a communication to Chairman Robson today stating the C.A.H.A. would be willing to send a team to play off with Chicago Babe Ruths, United States champions, at Atlantic City "around Easter."

The Belleville Angling Club is to hold a meeting in the Y.M.C.A. tonight, at which time the annual Bass Derby will be discussed and the Club's representatives to the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters will be appointed. Secretary Bill Hurst says that a large attendance is desired as there is much business to be transacted.

Tonight, the city basketball championships will be decided for the season of 1934-35. The Deacons and the "Y" squad clash for the city title while the two B.C.I. squads meet to decide the school-boy championship. Both games are being played at the Collegiate.

BRADDOCK AND BAER TO MEET

Hook up in Long Island Bowl Some Time in June

New York, April 12—It looks as though there's nothing left to arranging the next heavyweight championship fight except "several days' delay, a few more arguments and the formal announcement on Monday.

It's all probability James J. Braddock, the Jersey Irishman, who gave Art Lasky a licking recently, will square off against Max Baer in the big title at stake in Madison Square Garden or Long Island bowl midway through June.

"We've got the negotiations down to a point now," Mike Jacobs, who has offered me 15 per cent, and I'm asking for 17 1-2," whispered Joe Gould, Braddock's manager, in a confidential tone that could be heard for blocks. "But I have to, I'll give in, and the match is made. We're bound."

The Garden, punch drunk from the toughest opposition it has faced since Humbert Fugazy lionized Tex Rickard for a few seasons with open door privileges, is ready to announce that it has borrowed Braddock from Jacobs. Rickard has told Jacobs, Rickard's earliest new York associate, that he has tied up Baer for a September match, Primo Carnera, and Joe Louis along with Braddock.

MAROONS GIVEN THE STANLEY CUP

Members of The Team Presented With Gifts

Montreal, April 13—(CP)—The Stanley Cup was presented to Montreal Maroons at a banquet given the team, newspapermen and a few other guests by the Maroon Hockey Club, Toastmaster was Col. Hector Molson, oldest director of the club, while Frank Calder, president of the National Hockey League, handed the cup to T. P. Gorman, manager and vice-president of the club.

In presenting it Calder remarked he and Gorman were the only two now alive of those who helped form the N. H. L. in 1917. Calder referred to Maroons' three straight victories over Toronto Maple Leafs in the finals as just another blow to the critics of professional hockey who believed the sport was carried on for the gate alone.

Alex Connell, goaler, was presented with a cup donated by his teammates to make up for his missing the Ventza Trophy this season. Gorman was given a clock and Baldy Northcott, who was married recently, a gift of silver.

SPRING SONG

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

As Janet glanced at the newspaper of the man who sat beside her in the bus she realized with a start that this was the anniversary of Dave Wharton's disappearance—Dave, whom she was to have married soon. Janet sighed and once more reviewed the misfortunes of the past two years. The collapse of Dave's business. His mysterious departure without even a goodbye. The stroke of ill luck that wiped out her father's fortune soon afterward. Then his sudden death and her transition from comparative luxury to a world where girls had to look for jobs.

Her somber thoughts were broken by the stop of the bus at Maple Road. She alighted with her grip and began the half-mile walk to her Aunt Harriet's tiny cottage, to which she fled sometimes on a holiday when a heartache alone became intolerable. And there was another reason. Wilson Ames was again becoming importunate. He was that kind of man, Janet knew, to marry him, give up her secretarial job in his father's office.

But whenever Wilson spoke of love, Janet felt only repulsion. And always between her and her self-satisfied suitor came the image of another face; the blue eyes, the bronzed blond hair, the ready smile of Dave Wharton—though to be sure, his face had held sobriety for the last time she saw him.

So it was that Janet's heart had remained true and now, as she made her way along the road flanked by woods and fields, she noticed the patches of white, and whimsically she thought that Mother Winter's robe began to show holes through which peeped brown and greenness of Spring. Springtime was just around the turn. And, she thought, her pulses beat a bit faster, somehow with a suggestion of faith there.

Janet had almost reached the detached cottage of Aunt Harriet when she noticed that a car stood in front of the door—a rather old and somewhat battered machine that suggested hard service.

Waiting

At first she was tempted to turn back for she did not want to see callers, but finally she knocked. A moment later the door swung open and "Good-morning," said Aunt Harriet's arms.

"I—that is—I suppose the car outside means you have company," whispered Janet. "If I'm in the way—"

"Nonsense," exclaimed her aunt with a beaming smile. "I've been waiting for you; I had a feeling you would come."

"We!" asked Janet, mystified. And as she did and passed into the living room, she saw a tall, quiet-behind her, she heard a firm step coming toward her. She looked up in amusement and in one swift moment took in the stalwart figure, the bronzed face, the keen and guarded hands, the tousled blond hair of the young man.

"Janet!" cried he, with a joyful ring to every word. But Janet drew back and as she stood up a little more proudly heard herself say, rather coolly, "Why—I—I didn't expect to see you here—Mr. Wharton."

The smile died from her aunt's face as she watched the tableau. Dave, confused and hurt, was at a loss for an instant. "Janet!" he began finally, "—I really can't blame you, after all. It was a—a cowardly thing I did. But, dear, at the time I believed I couldn't do anything else. Me, broke, with nothing—you with everything. I couldn't go through with it honestly. I couldn't let you in for a life with a pauper. And—and then afterward, after I'd gone from being a hard rock miner into a lucky claim-owner, then, when I tried to get in touch with you, to let you know then I found out your hard work—about your father—and no one was able to put me on your track. It seemed that you, too, had dropped out of sight—just—but it did. Honestly, Janet, I've had only thoughts of you all the time. And—now that I've something to offer, I rushed back.

A Last Hope

"Why dear, I've been in the city days, trying to get track of you. Same old luck. No clues—until at last I chanced to remember Aunt Harriet, up here in Westchester. And now—and now—"

"I'm very glad that you have done so well," broke in Janet, amazed at the chill in her voice. "You're looking well, too; quite like one from the wide open spaces."

Furtively wiping her eyes and strangely silent, Aunt Harriet had withdrawn with a prayer on her lips. Dave stood in his tracks like an awkward school-boy.

The awkward situation was broken by the blast of an auto horn almost as impressive as a liner's siren. Janet stepped to a window and drew back the while curtain to saw the big blue car with its wealth of polished trimmings alongside the battered machine.

That would be Wilson Ames, of course. She did not dare to turn and again meet the eyes of Dave. And she began to fear he would hear the pounding of her own heart. In the meantime, Aunt Harriet had once more opened the door and Mr. Ames, smiling and debonair in a young fashion plate, had barged in.

"Janet!" he cried, with eyes only for her. There was no trace of running away from me like this—on a holiday, too!"

Then he noticed the other man. "Oh, pardon," he murmured, "I didn't know."

Janet turned back from the window and with a moment's silence ebbed from one to the other. Then she seemed to make up her mind. Her haughty look, matched into a smile that was tenderly maternal.

"Oh, Wilson," she said, breaking the tension of a general silence," I want you to meet my—fiance—Mr. David Wharton. He's just back from the War."

Ames muttered a common-place and gave Dave a grudging hand. While Dave's face lighted up with a gladness that was good to see.

"I—I'll be rushing on, Janet," Ames lamely. Good-bye, Janet, I'll be seeing you—at the office—tomorrow?"

Dave Speaks Up

"No' I think not, Mr. Ames," said Dave, looking at Janet for approval of his proprietary announcement.

When Aunt Harriet had shown Wilson out and returned to busy herself at getting lunch, Dave again stood wordless for an instant, then walked over to where Janet sat standing with one hand resting on a curtain in her fingers. "Beloved!" he said, patting an arm around her and pulling her into the circle of his brown, starved hand, "thanks for your forgiveness and I'll try to make it up to you for the years I've taken—"

"I don't think it was cowardly. I think it was very brave to go away into a strange land a strange adventure to try to make money for me," she defended him.

"And—and will you go back with me to that strange land?" he asked hopefully, tenderly.

"Anywhere—anywhere—with you, David," she whispered. "I—I don't feel just like a—a—Cinderella. And I'm the Prince Charming himself in person," said David. As she put her arms around him Aunt Harriet could be heard humming in the kitchen.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was lighting a cigar with a satisfied expression and was busy sitting and thinking, saying, O dear, O dear.

Why all the wailing and lamentation, pop said.

Morning what was a matter, and ma said, O never mind, why should I bother you with little wimmins woes?

Why not, on the contrary? pop said, As a matter of fact a man's more fundamental viewpoints and broader outlook on things just what's needed to transform your seemingly almighty problems into bubbles dancing in the air of pure reason, he said.

Well, all rite, I'll tell you if you care to bother listening, ma said, O dear what a dilemma, I told Maud Hewe rite up and down to her face that we couldn't go over there and play bridge with them tonite.

I told her that you had played twice already this week, and that each of those times I'd had to drag you out of the point of a proverbial pistol, so I told her it was point blank out of the question because you'd certainly insist on staying home tonite and browning idly over the newspaper beneath clouds of cigar smoke. Of course I was polite about it, but I was firm and final. The only concession I made was to promise I would call her up once more just to assure her that there wasn't the slightest chance of your agreeing to play. So that's what I'll have to do now, and O dear, wimmin are so selfish, I know she'll take it as a personal affront. O dear, ma said.

O, all rite, pop said, I'll go, pop said. This will teach me not to be curious in the future, he said, and ma said, O William you are perfectly lovely of you. I had no idear of trying to influence you in any way.

It's kind of a surprise to me too, pop said.

And they put their things on and went without ma even calling up Mrs. Hewes.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

In the Dungera foothills, a company of "Tommies" led by Captain Canby lay ready to follow their comrades over the top against the Gurkhas, when dawn tinged the Indian mountains. Across the valley they could see the campfires of the natives.

Faintly, weird sounds were borne across to them by the night breeze. Pat's father, sleepless, thought of the strange rites going on among the enemy as they raised their courage by incantations to their gods. He wondered what might be happenin to Pat, his daughter.

For over an hour, the motor-car bearing the three fugitives raced down the road. They were now well out of the maharajah's immediate territory and Roger's apprehensions were a bit relieved. Once they were forced to slow down by a rocky bend.

Suddenly a light ahead, brought them to a stop. Roger, pistol cocked, investigating, had gone but a few yards when a startled scream brought him racing back. As though the night had swallowed her up, Patricia Canby had disappeared!

CALLOUS NEGLECT OF WAGE SCALES IN SILK INDUSTRY

Charge is Made in Report of Price Spreads Commission

COTTON COMPETITION

Woollen Situation Better in Wages, Report Declares

Ottawa, Apr. 13 (CP) — While manufacturers in the important branches of the silk industry have benefited materially from increased tariffs "which came into force coincident with the beginning of the depression," certain firms companies have exploited the situation and shown "a callous disregard for the decency of wage scales," in the conclusion of the royal commission on prices, but hoping whose report was made public yesterday. The report adds investigation of some of these whose operations have been extremely profitable "disclosed wage and employment conditions which can be described only as shocking".

Competition in the cotton group was "imperfect". The larger companies failed to compete with each other in certain goods, some being the sole producers of important lines. The situation was better in the woollen industry, where the average woollens manufactured were relatively high and the wage scales in the woollens were higher than in cotton, but the companies wages were "exceedingly low".

Well Organized.

Synthetic silk was manufactured by ten companies in Canada, Courtaulds (Canada) Ltd., and the Canadian Celanese Ltd., "in the matter of employment policies, both companies appeared to be well managed and good records," the report declares.

Associations of employers in the textile industries had been established and representatives of these associations had met with the elected members in matters of public relations and public representations. They regulated expenditures of the industry before the tariff board.

According to evidence, however, no attempt has so far been made to regulate wage scales or working conditions generally," said the commissions. "The reason being that the existing tariff and quotas had the power to control their members. We are forced to the conclusion that while manufacturers are prepared to co-operate for the purpose of seeking benefits or protecting their reputations, they have not taken advantage of the opportunity of a permanent central organization to promote intelligent appreciation of and to prevent exploitation by their members."

The commission recommends one way in which trade associations might operate, that is, by the promotion of proper standards of consumer education including dishonest marking and labelling, and curbing unfair competitive practices. Reference is made to "destructive competition" prevailing in the cotton industry, especially in the form of increasing degree of concentration in the hands of a few companies with interests in fields other than that in which their main activity lies.

Integration Urged.

"Through interlocking directorates, as has been pointed out, there is a tendency to the formation of an effective connection between some of the largest companies in the cotton, woollen, silk and knit goods trade," said the commissioners. "Thus while the association has not developed to the point where two or three very large corporations, operating in all the important fields of the industry, dwarf the refining companies, the presence of the same financial interests in important units in different fields may well suggest the possibility of such a development."

The commissioners were A. M. Bins Co. Ltd., of Montreal for the wages paid by that firm.

Mr. Bennett dealt with all the advantages that this one possesses there should be no room for even a small factory, such as the M. E. Bins Co. Ltd., of Montreal, where in February, 1934, the average wage rate for all male workers was 10 cents an hour, and of female workers 9 cents, the average for 1934 for men and women in 1934 were paid less than the standard 25 cents an hour for female workers; there on a 55-hour basis, the average for all time weekly earnings in 1934 for men and women male employees was $5.72.

Rev. Bert Howard Installed Albert College Principal

Interesting Ceremony Conducted by Rev. E. W. Rowland, Presbytery Chairman—Greetings From Sister Institutions Are Brought

Rev. Bert Howard of Arcola, Sask., was installed as principal of Albert College on Friday evening in the presence of faculty, students, Principal Emeritus Dr. E. N. Baker, M.A., D.D., and representatives of Presbyterian and other educational institutions. Rev. E. W. Rowland of Stirling, chairman of Belleville District Church Presbytery, performed the ceremony in the Memorial Church.

Principal Howard has for months been principal in all but in the installation. He succeeds the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Bishop, who resigned, and his credentials were brought from Queen's Theological College by Rev. Principal H. A. R. Mackay. Rev. Dr. James Semple, B.A., S.T.D., Th.D., reading his letter of regret at absence through the press of duties in Eastern Canada, from Queen's Theological College, a letter institution of Albert College, by Principal C. R. Carscallen, M.A., Ed., from The Bay of Quinte Conference. Rev. Dr. C. B. Reddick on old Albert College boy, now of Lindsay, acting on behalf of the Rev. G. C. R. McQuade, president of Conference, himself an Albert graduate; by the Rev. Dr. E. N. Baker, principal emeritus of Albert, from the Rev. Charles W. Bishop, late principal and the Rev. Dr. Cunningham, principal of Mount Allison Boys' School.

While the students and public were gathering, Mr. V. P. Hunt, head of the music department of the college, played a number of pianoforte selections. The proceedings opened with the installation processional, led by the bursar, Mr. R. W. Ackerman, which was accompanied by the principal-elect, and followed by the faculty, the assisted visitors and representatives and local clergy.

After the singing of "All Hail to Belief", Rev. Robert Hall, B.A., B.D., read the Epistle to the Colossians, 1:9-20, and the Rev. I. B. Naylor recited prayers.

Presentation.

The principal-elect was presented by Mr. Ackerman who outlined a brief history of his life as a graduate of Wesley College, Winnipeg, his teaching service in the Canadian West, and his interest in boys' work. The latter interest which led him came to Belleville as an apt succession to Principal Bishop and has already won the esteem and love of the students and the people of the community, and conference and the public. "Knowing his record, I have much pleasure in presenting to you, Mr. Chairman, the Rev. Bert Howard as Principal of Albert College," said the bursar.

Rev. W. T. Plemmington, M.A., B.Ped., in delivering the charge to the principal-elect brought greet-

Principal Emeritus To Principal Elect

Rev. Dr. E. N. Baker, Principal Emeritus of Albert College, to the newly installed Principe, Rev. Bert Howard at Albert College:—

Mr. Chairman:

Permit me to express my great pleasure in seeing you occupying the chair at this installation service. It is most fitting that one of the old students and one who in his life, and character expresses what Albert stands for should occupy the position you do.

Representing the founders of Albert College and all the students, who have passed through her halls out into positions of honor, and trust in all phases of national and international life during the forty-eight years of her ministry, I welcome you, Mr. Howard, to the Principalship of this Institution

It was born in prayer, maintained on faith by men and women of the past, who sacrificed deeply, that the young people of their homes might receive higher education under Christian auspices. I emphasize this, for never were such institutions needed more than they are to-day.

Standing as I do, sir, connected with Albert College, for many years as student, principal, and now as Principal Emeritus, I pass on to you the traditions of a worthy past, for you to enrich and hand on to coming generations.

FARM IMPLEMENT INDUSTRY LACKS PERFECT RIVALRY

High Pressure Salesmanship Blamed For Debts

PRICES INFLEXIBLE

U.S. System For Trial Here Advised by Report

Ottawa, April 13 (CP)—"Imperfect competition" among agricultural implement manufacturers is reflected in the domination by three large companies of the whole industry in Canada, according to the report of the Royal Commission on Mass Buying made public yesterday. Even in the absence of a direct agreement among them, substantial similarity in prices and practices has been maintained over a long period of years.

While some competition by other industries had led to abuses, competition" lack of competition among agricultural implement manufacturers had resulted in higher prices to the farmers. The policy of the companies had been to maintain prices and to adjust production to sales in their prices—"in other words, price inflexibility and uneconomical production," the report said.

What competition there is in the industry expressed itself in salesmanship, in keeping and supplying spare parts, and in long credits. This, the Commissioners suggested, was responsible for the "high-pressure salesmanship in the years prior to 1930, and the heavy debts contained a proportion of the bad debts which were subsequently incurred."

Recommend U. S. System

The Commissioners recommend a trial be made of the United States system for the distribution of agricultural implements. In that country the manufacturers sell to local dealers on contract. These latter stock implements and parts and act as agents for the manufacturers avert the load of bad debts. There was no room for further standardization of parts, the report suggested.

As in many other industries, the manufacturer of agricultural implements had a long credit period. The Commission believed it practicable to adjust this condition satisfactorily and suggested legislation was applied both to industry and finance. In this industry the dominating companies had not been guilty of "unfair practices."

A solution to the troubles might come from external sources—a return to conditions favorable to increasing purchasing power on the part of the farmers through a winding-up and recapitalisation of two or more manufacturing companies, the report declared.

BADEN POWELL PLANTS AN OAK

Victoria, B.C., April 13— Lord Baden Powell, Chief Scout and famous soldier showed the scoutcraft gathered in the Province of Alberta yesterday, when he planted an English oak tree, in the Mayors Grove of Beaconhill Park here this afternoon. At a ceremony attended by Mayor David Leeming, Alderman T. Lloyd Pattullo, Scout and Guide officials and other citizens, the 70 year old chief scout wielded the shovel with dexterity, and carefully set the earth underfoot with such knowledge and skill, as to draw forth a tribute from Premier Pattullo, former Minister of Lands, the Department which controls matters of forest source. You are a real forester, sir," he said. The premier went on to say that Boy Scouts and Girl Guides of British Columbia (confer) could take pride in preserving forest wealth against fire and other waste.

JEWERY OBSERVES PASSOVER FEAST

On Wednesday Begins Most Notable Feast in Calendar

Beginning Wednesday of next week, Jews all the world, as well as throughout the world will observe their Passover, one of the most notable feasts in their religious calendar. It lasts for seven days, during which time no leaven bread is eaten. Special services throughout this period will also be held at the local synagogue.

This holiday celebrates the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. It was traced originally to the time, when Israel dwelt in Palestine and engaged in agriculture. It marked the beginning of the barley harvest when the people carried their first crops to the temple of Jerusalem.

The Jews became slaves in Egypt Pitsrahs, who ruled Egypt enslaved the children of Israel, who dwelt in their land. Jews therefore remained slaves under cruel conditions, building cities, palaces and pyramids. Moses delivered them from bondage and they left the land of Egypt by leading them as free men through the wilderness to the foot of Sinai, where the laws were revealed to them.

Wants Radio Debate

NORMAN THOMAS

Norman Thomas, Socialist leader of New York, in an open letter to Senator Huey Pinglfid Long of Louisiana and the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, challenged them to a radio debate, Thomas accused both the Senator and Father Coughlin of preparing for American Fascism, and charged their position as "friends of the common man" was false. The Socialist leader also took a rap at General Hugh Johnson, saying he was "dead" than his own Blue Eagle."

12 Admirals to Fly Flags At Spithead Naval Review

LONDON, April 13.—(CP Cable) —More than 160 fighting craft will take part in the Royal Jubilee Naval Review at Spithead Tuesday, July 16. The flags of 12 Admirals will be flown and the assembly will constitute the largest British armada assembled in naval strength since the "test mobilization" in the same waters in July 1914.

New and Mediterranean fleets in full strength will be present with the greater part of the combinedover reserve fleet. This makes the entire capital ship fleet and practically all the "A Class" cruisers will be in line, probably a record number of three parallel lines with Admiralty Yacht Enchantress. Each line will be several miles long and a spectacle of almost unprecedented impressiveness will be presented when this modern armada weighs anchor, upon the King's inspection and proceeds seaward for tactical exercises.

Although London is the largest port in the world it is fifteen years since there has been anything of the Royal Navy in the Thames estuary. As a prelude however to the Spithead Review, a large section of the home fleet will put into the Thames next month. The vessels will include the 35,000 ton Nelson, flagship of the home fleet, and her Sister Rodney, at present the two largest battleships in the world; also the new battle-cruiser Hood, largest warship afloat. Against her will lie two only but efficient craft, the mammoth aircraft carrier, Furious and Courageous.

Discuss Danube Treaties Independence of Austria At Rome Parley May 20

Germany Expected to Announce Intention of Attending

MUSSOLINI SPEAKS

Austria Considered The Prime Danger in Europe

Stresa, Apr. 13 (CP)—The powers interested in discussion of Danubian Treaties and in guarantees of the independence of Austria will meet at Rome May 20. It was officially announced this afternoon.

Germany is expected to announce immediately whether she will attend the conference.

Besides Germany, France, Italy and Britain, nations invited to the Rome conference will include Poland, Yugoslavia, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Rumania.

The feature of this morning's session was a long speech by Mussolini who argued for increased armaments for Austria.

It was hailed as a general belief the strengthening of Austria's military forces would lead to her involve an increase in the armaments of Hungary and Bulgaria and precipitate would lead to the revision of the peace treaties dealing with the three countries.

It has been generally recognized at Geneva Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria will demand the right of conscription. Military experts have established the boundary militarily by means armies totalling 15 per cent of the population.

The three nations have indicated, however, they will not follow Germanys example and violate their treaties unilaterally. Rather, they would seek equally rights through negotiations.

Today's developments coincided with the calling of a new conference when Austria is considered the prime danger problem of Europe. It was believed efforts must be concentrated on a pact eliminating Austria as a powder keg.

WILL NOT PLACE NOTICE ON PAPER

Clerk of House Writes Motion by Stevens Out of Order

Ottawa, April 13.—(CP)—Arthur Beauchesne, clerk of the House of Commons, said today Hon. H. H. Stevens' notice of motion seeking investigation of the Price Spreads and Mass Buying report would not be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Beauchesne said Mr. Stevens' notice was out of order on two grounds, first it would involve expenditure of money in implementing the Mass Buying Commission's report and such a motion cannot be made by a private member, secondly the motion would involve a censure on Mr. Hanson and the Government and not on the House.

It was not expected the report would be debated before the Easter recess as the Government already has said it wished the long adjournment to afford time to digest the report.

Fords, Wed 47 Years, Observe Anniversary

Early Days When He Tinkered With His Car Are Recalled

Detroit, April 13—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford observed a wedding anniversary Thursday almost as widely as the honeymoon days 47 years ago when Mrs. Ford sat reading or sewing while her husband tinkered with his first "horseless carriage."

For Mrs. Ford it also was a birthday. She married her inventor husband on her twenty-first birthday. Mr. Ford spent a part of the day in his engineering laboratory at Dearborn and the rest of it in a quiet observance of the anniversary with Mrs. Ford at home.

For the couple it was a recollection as well of the period in which they travelled from a small Michigan farm to prominence and fortune and of the transition from the Baxter Street home behind which in an old carriage house, Mr. Ford tinkered of evenings while his wife sat and watched.

Of her first meeting with Mr. Ford his wife once said: "He made absolutely no impression on me. When I found he liked to tinker, however, they sat out two dances at a party while the young mechanically inclined farm lad explained to her the intricacies of a watch he had made—his hands held with "rum" and whatnot."

From that meeting on, Miss Clara Jane Bryant recalled, Henry Ford "was different" from the other young men. It was two years later, in 1888, however, that they were married.

Mrs. Ford has always been to her husband "the believer." When Mr. Ford made the motored contraption he called a horseless carriage, she took a ride with him. Mr. Ford has frankly admitted that no one had as much to do with shaping his career as his wife.

Kingsville, Ont., April 13 — The "seventies" are a pretty good period, according to Henry Ford, in a telegram to Jack Miner, who is 70 next month, the latter's seventieth birthday.

"Welcome to the Seventy Club, to which your seventieth birthday admits you. I am several years ahead of you, but I know the joys of the seventies are a pretty good period."

New Deal Funeral Service
We have realized for some considerable time that it was a hardship for the average family to pay for the price of funerals that it was necessary for the funeral establishments of Belleville to charge to order to meet their overhead charges.
We do not believe any firm has charged more than was really necessary to maintain their service, in fact we believe that we have operated at a loss the last two or three years. But the duplication of service caused by too many firms, of necessity, makes the overhead charges per funeral far too high under present conditions.
We believe the public are demanding a NEW DEAL in funerals as in all other business.
We now offer a NEW DEAL POLICY, whereby we forego all interest on capital invested, all depreciation charges and caskets from our own factory at cost. We see no difference in having our money invested in a Funeral Home without interest than invested in Bonds or a Farm paying no interest.
By operating our own factory we get our caskets considerably less than the regular manufacturers cost and we employ only union staff so that every employee when not engaged in funerals is engaged in the manufacturing of caskets.
All our new cases are now on display in our show rooms and we invite inspection.
We ask you to investigate this NEW DEAL without obligation, as it is provided for every family a better funeral for less money.

REV. BERT HOWARD IS INSTALLED

tings from the Board of Christian Education of the United Church, before Dr. Flemmington left the onto the board had passed a vote of confidence in the work of the new principal, he said.

"I bring the greetings and best wishes from Alumni Association, Alumnae Association, Ladies' School and Boys' School, nine hundred students and faculty, he said.

The Perennial Boy.

To Dr. Flemmington it appeared that the private school had a perennial future. He told the staffing and faculty that a principal of a boys' school should remain a "boy" now. "I think that in Mr. Howard you have such a fine principal. Already he has made his influence felt. It is a tragic thing when a man forgets he is a boy. I see here, we are all boys under the smokehouse, and others have all attempted to produce the ideal boy. But I have given it up. But if you give it up, eugenics would come in and we should select our wives for the ideal boy development' and there would be pre-natal service, special hygiene and education, then a travel to round out education, and after that four years at the product would be the ideal boy! But as long as the fail chooses the lean, the short the tall, we find that experience love comes in, as long as we remember we are boys and girls ourselves, and as long as they are dumb so that they can love us, as long as we fit the boy into our ideal," point of the waistcoat," the principal said.

Asking what boys were made of Dr. Flemmington said that the physical state was stressed, but under this development, under the bones of the body is the grey matter connected with the spinal cord. This grey matter looked small but when magnified it is shown not to be solid but to consist of millions of nerve nerves or neurons, and the ends of these are almost together. Through some impulse two of these connect (these neurons are both sensitory and motor), and then you have thought or memory. Once you have those two ends of a neuron touching, it is more easier to set up that connection again.

Love Conquers All.

"Many have tried to picture the ideal boy. Rabelais, Froebel, Devey, Kilpatrick, G. B. Shaw, Bertrand Hendrig and Rabindranath.

Principal Flemmington said that carefully inclined to make a peristaltic and it must be admitted that it has great influence, but "environment makes us unfair. He shows that we can do something. We blame heredity, but we must be cautious about blaming too much on heredity. Fifty per cent of your characteristics can be traced it is said, to your parents, one quarter of them to your grandparents, one eighth to great grandparents, and so on to one centennith, but we can on but with that you never get an entire unit. Qfinally you may get back to some ancestor you can blame.

"There are four levels of conduct in every boy. First the learning by incidentals as when he learns by pain to avoid overeating and such experience; it pays not to overeat; then by habit and pleasures which he soon learns society automatically hands out to him then by anticipation of reward or punishment, and then the fourth level whereby we do what they do regardless of pain or pleasure which gives us the ideal boy or them; they do what they do because it is right. These levels stand by them in the order I have given.

Right Pictures in Mind

"What are we doing to see that the right pictures are placed in the ideal galleries of the minds of boys today? We find no less than 41 such movements in Canada today. None are national, but it is difficult to say what the influence of these movements will be. Unless educationists and the churches see that the right kinds of pictures are being hung in the minds' galleries, there is danger."

The principal referred to the six great interests with human interests involve, citizenship, health, morality, recreation, religion, and family. He asked why so many people seem that far in the dark concerning sex. Why be asked, should such a picture be allowed to hang in the minds of people? Read newspapers and magazines and you get a false impression, and yet there is nothing further from the truth, then that. Health is stressed and yet doctors say that if they could practice all they would there would be a different world. What picture is unemployment hanging up in the gallery of the mind?

Place of Private School

"I think the private school such as Albert College has a fine opportunity," remarked Principal Flemmington. "The public school is doing a fine work, yet it has the boy for only one sixth of his waking hours. How can you expect anything? It is the greatest task undertaken by man because the boy is under other forces and influences.

"If we are going to have a leigured industry, it is necessary to know what we are going to do with our leisure time.

"Religion is life, life is religion. Yet we stress denomination rather than religion.

"Character is changed in the necessity of events. The father is away most of the time often the mother as well. Here the private school comes in and helps the children with guidance.

"The speaker told of an answer which a real estate agent who asked why she should not buy a horse. "I was born in a hospital, raised in a boarding school, courted in an automobile, married in church, spend the afternoon at bridge, enjoy the movies in the evening, and when I die I shall be buried from the undertaker's. Now I need a horse at home? All I need is a garage." This caricature said the principal, contains the true private school with the public school and the church and other organizations are putting on the pictures which will make a finer world."

Declaration

Principal elect Howard then declared, "I promise, God being my helper, to uphold the traditions and maintain the principles and purpose of this institution as set forth by its founders and affirmed in its character."

The act of installation was accompanied by these words of the chairman "Bert Howard: By authority of the Board of Governors I install you as principal of Albert College and invest you with the authority, rights, and privileges thereto pertaining."

Rev. Dr. Semple pronounced the installation prayer.

Students of the College Glee Club sang under direction of Prof. Sam Anglin, the stirring 'Pinlandia' anthem "Thou Lord of Home". Their balance, clearness of enunciation, dress, and volume united to give a pleasure which followed this number.

Felicitations.

Greetings were then presented to the new principal. Dr. Semple acting for Principal Kent of Queen's Theological College, Kingston, read a letter in which Principal Kent regretted he was unable to attend. He referred to the long and notable history of the college, and of the service of his past principals. Mr. Howard came in for high praise but Dr. Kent expressed satisfaction that under his regime the college would make marked progress. On behalf of the Theological College he sent good wishes to Albert College.

Principal Dr. C. R. Carscallen of the Ontario Ladies' College brought greetings from a "sister institution" in more senses than one, he remarked. "I know the weight of tradition at Albert College, and the Ontario Ladies' College has met with a better future than a continuation of the glorious past. Principal Howard has resources and will find happiness and success in his work. Today it is a privilege to have a sharer," Dr. Carscallen went on. "In the matter of the spirit we are linked by ties of friendship."

Rev. Dr. C. S. Reddick, chairman of the Lindsay Presbytery, acting for President McQuade of the Bay of Quinte Conference, in Albert College was peculiarly an institution of the conference. He was proud of the long line of principals. In Mr. Howard the highest confidence was placed by the conference. Dr. Reddick in closing referred to "co-ed" days at Albert and said "I miss the girls".

Principal Emeritus Dr. E. N. Baker, who has been connected with the school for more than two generations, gives a short and witty address as he rose to greet the new principal. His reference to Principal Howard is given in another column.

A telegram from Dr. Bishop was read from Montreal that he was unable to attend. On behalf of Mrs. Bishop and herself he extended best wishes to the new principal and the college.

The hymn "The Lord 'Tries Keeps" was sung and the benediction pronounced by the Rev. R. H. Newman, who was formerly followed in the Ackerman Hall of the college.

Police News

Local police today were on the look-out for a 1928 Buick sedan reported stolen from Shannonville. The car was painted grey in color and bore Ontario licence plates number H 25-219.

Only seven transients applied at the police station for a warm night's lodging last night, yesterday's drizzling rain discouraging shiftless to the general failing off of transients on the march.

Donald Lasher, Sillsville truck driver reported an accident to the police late yesterday afternoon, according to Lasher's report he was proceeding eastward on Dundas St. when suddenly a little girl started to run across the street at the corner of Bridge Avenue. Lasher applied the brakes of his truck, but before he could stop the little girl had run into the left front fender, and fallen to the pavement. Before Lasher could dismount from his vehicle the little girl had jumped up and run hurriedly home, apparently unhurt.

Upon investigation by police it was disclosed that the little girl was June Martin, George St. She had only sustained a bruised hip when her parents revealed. No charges are laid as the entire matter was purely accidental.

DEATH OF MRS. CHARLES MACPHERSON

Mrs. Charles MacPherson, 73 years of age, died at her home, Tweed, on Thursday, April 11th, after a short illness. Deceased was born in Huntingdon township, Hastings county, and was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wallace. She was married to Charles MacPherson, who predeceased her by a few years. Mrs. MacPherson was a member of Tweed Presbyterian church and was highly respected by all who knew her. She is survived by one son, Wallace, Tweed, and one daughter, Mrs. Wm. Hall, Tweed. Funeral service was held on Saturday afternoon, April 13th, at 2.30 o'clock from the late residence, Rev. Mr. Hall officiating. Interment was made in Tweed cemetery.

CONDEMNED MAN PRESERVES CALM

Approach of May 2nd Has Not Disrupted His Daily Routine

Eighteen days away from death by the law until a mental clemency or other action is shown on his behalf by the Department of Justice, Harold W. Vermilyea is still imperturbable, model prisoner, apparently unconcerned regarding his probable fate.

Sentenced to hang on the morning of May 2, next for the murder of his aged mother in this city last October, Vermilyea, former fruit and confidence operator of Ontario, Oshawa, and one time resident of Ham-this district where he was born, maintains the inscrutable calm and lack of emotion so plainly evident during the thirty days of his trial for murder in this city last February.

Since sentence of death was pronounced and he was returned to the death cell where he has been kept, doubly guarded, and allowed only brief periods of exercise in the strongly barred jail corridor, his routine has varied little. The greasy hours are whiled away with games of solitaire, jig-saw puzzles, well thumbed pages and in working innumerable crossword puzzles with the aid of a dictionary. Occasionally the lonely hours are broken by chats through the cell bars and under the eyes of the guards with the occasional visitors who are allowed to see him.

His stolid composure is one of comment on the part of guards and all jail officials. Though death looms, the model prisoner eats well and is reported sleeping fairly well and seemingly unperturbed, though the mind of his predicament that apparently been accepted with the grace of one cast to his fate.

"I can see little difference in him as the days go by," said Chief Gaoler George H. French when questioned today. "There is very little change in his appearance and he is the same manner and actions. He appears resigned."

The recent visit of Mrs. J. Schorr, former Ontario, Oshawa friend of the family to Belleville apparently heightened Vermilyea's affection for daily visits to the jail during her two weeks stay were eagerly looked forward to by the prisoner, according her visit Mrs. Schorr admitted that arrangements were being completed for the care of the two Vermilyea children at the former home. It is not probable that either child will visit Belleville to see their parent before May 2nd.

At frequent intervals, his spiritual adviser, Adjutant W. Martin, of the local Salvation Army Corps spends considerable time in close communication with the condemned man. His visit have been cordially welcomed.

Vermilyea is still careful of his diet, preferring the fresh fruits to any luxuries which might be enjoyed as the fare of ordinary men. Through proper balance of these fresh foods he has kept himself in splendid physical condition.

CHAPTER FORTY-SEVEN

Even before he could move or cry out, Dick was upon him. Seizing the killer, he raised him bodily in his arms and sent him crashing against the wall. Dazed and blinded, Sarl staggered to his feet, this time to feel hands that were stronger than his hands close about his neck and fasten there. Powerless eye starings his very life ebbing from him, he felt himself savagely shaken back and forth, as a rat is shaken by a terrier.

One hand still holding him in that iron grasp, Dick searched the empty holster inside Sarl's coat, then swiftly touched the pockets and, certain that the man was unarmed, he dropped him, limp and gasping, to the floor and turned to his father. But already Barnes had risen Stolen Lowell to a chair where little by little the flush of life returned to the old man's cheeks. His eyes opened, he tried to speak, but could not.

"Take him outside," Dick ordered. "Put him into the air." Then his voice fell grimly to Sarl. "What I have to do now I want to do alone."

His mates, motionless, while Barnes, half carrying, half supporting his drooping burden, passed down the stairs, and a moment later the sound of their steps on the porch outside told Dick, that he and the killer were alone at last.

Sarl had risen. He stood now across the room, back to the wall, eyeing in his eyes lay abject terror, for the face he looked into held neither rage nor any least sign of pity, but only an inexorable resolve that suddenly had filled the lamplit room with the brooding presence of death itself.

Weakly Sarl raised his hands. "I'm unarmed," he cried in a shrieking whisper, then trembled in frightened recollection, for now those self-same words came back to him like an echo from the dead—the echo of Stuth's voice that very morning as he stood by the corral.

Without a word of answer Dick drew his automatic, and at sight of it a muffled shriek burst from Sarl's trembling lips. "You would not do that, Dick! You dare do that, you can't shoot me down without—"

"What chance had Stuh when you rode up before his bedroom? The stern voice answered. "What chance had Rena had when you lit your cigar? When you sent Bull Pablo to shoot me down?"

Shaking with fright, the killer crawled forward, pleading, begging for life, every act of avoid struggling out on his forehead, the awful fear of death. Into his heart, with each new final outburst of panic he ran and made wildly for the door, but with a single swift movement Dick threw him back, slammed the door closed, and in spurting lock mapped in place.

Like a trapped animal Sarl cowered before him, shaken with fear, and for a time Dick looked down into those eyes, then turned away with a gesture of disgust, laid his automatic on the table.

"I ought to shoot you like a mad dog, Sarl. I ought to rid the whole country of you once and for all." He hesitated, then almost against his will he added, "But I'll not do it in my heart to play the game that it is in my heart to play the game that way."

A momentary gleam of hope lighted the shadow of fear, but following the thought, Dick shook his head.

"No, you won't escape me, Sarl, not this time. I'll tie you to a chair and back and let other men than I decide your fate. I'll ride down to the courts I'm taking you, not to where money can be had for power will protect you. You're going with me this day to face the Guardians and the men whose friends you and your henchmen have killed and robbed and ruin. Before those men I'll tell you my story. I'll tell them of the name that you've crawled in the sands just before I died.

"What chance do you think you'll have back there, Dick? It might be more merciful to shoot you now, for little hope lies among the men of Verde, and it's the men of Verde who will decide your fate tonight."

The newly kindled hope in Sarl's breast died quickly. Desperately he realized that the justice of the ranchers would be swift and terrible, that at their hands lay only certain death. Wildly his eyes roved about the room, passing from the closed door to the table where Dick's automatic lay, and then—he stiffened—he saw the open drawer of the desk, where he had thrown his own gun a few moments before.

Quickly his eyes dropped to conceal the change that had come over him. He raised a hand weakly to his throat, and with short, dragging sighs, staggered forward.

"Give me a little time, Dick," the dawning voice pleaded. "Time to think. There must be something I can say, something I can do."

RHEUMATISM
Neuralgia Lumbago
Neuritis Sciatica
My muscles were loosened up in great shape," writes A. A. Brooks, Emerald, Sask., telling of his suffering from this muscular rheumatism. "I tried 'Nerviline' and was thoroughly satisfied. Sharp, pains and dull aches vanished. Stop needless misery. Get 'N-R-C-s.' No harmful drugs. 30 and 60 everywhere.
NERVILINE RESTORES, CARBOLINE
T-R-C's

As if broken by the weight of his despair, Sarl sank forward, dropping head down the room, but always beneath those veiled eyes which he gaze held to the desk, only a few feet away. Surreptitiously the fingers of his right hand closed. A step more, still another, while Dick, his back to the closed door, stood quietly watching. Another step. He saw the black muzzle of his gun wailing there within the drawer. With almost irresistible force came the impulse to dash forward, but not yet. He must be calm.

Again he looked up. "Will you let me write a last letter, Dick? You won't mind my delay that? Only a minute, and I'll go wherever you say."

He took a final step. Trembling with eagerness, he reached for the drawer as his fingers flashed suddenly forward coiling greedily around the weapon and with a wild cry of triumph he whirled.

Too late to reach his own gun, Dick saw the automatic in Sarl's grasp. With lightning swiftness his hands whirled to the table, overturning it with one violent thrust, sending the lamp crashing to the floor, enveloping the room in absolute darkness. Instantly he dropped to his knees just as a bolt of flame blazed from Sarl's weapon and a bullet ripped into the door beside him.

Noiselessly over the wooden floor Dick's hands groped about him for his automatic. Ever nearer he heard the cautious movements of Sarl's advance, the soft approaching scrape of leather on boots. Then with a thrill Dick's fingers touched cold metal, and through the darkness came the sharp click of the hammer as swung Sarl that now his antagonist was armed and ready.

All movements ceased. No sound, except outside the night, a distant murmur of wind among the pines. Within the cabin a tense, black-green room, the silence of death lay, like hovering, malignant spirit of impending tragedy.

Above the beating of his heart Dick heard the faint, stealthy crawling of a body, and as he moved forward on hands and knees, a loose board creaked. At the sound one light leaped again from the gun, followed by a shot from Dick with silence.

Lowell's eardrums whirred with the crash of those shots. Acrid and bitter was the smoke that filled the air of burned powder, tinging his eyes and throat. Instinctively, through the darkness for some shadowy movement, the dim light with infinite caution, he placed his feet against the floor but not the slightest sound came to him from where the killer crouched.

Moments passed, each waiting for the other to make the first revealing move. Each knew that only a single misstep, a crouching and ready, lurked the menace from out the lowering peon sheep-skin to the masters of the great haciendas. It was as if the dawn of better times were already brightening.

With that pleading days soft mists had gathered over the desert in the early afternoon, promising that it soon another spring would bring its age-old blaze of brief, vivid flowerment. Each day the sun rose from the southern hills of Mexico grew warmer, lazily drifting through the young, budding leaves that were already painting the adobe walls of Dick's hacienda.

And toward the end of just such a day a man bearing Nora and Solon Lowell stopped before the ranch house. Even in the light of the low desert sun one might see that the man's face still bore the shadow of that gruelling hour in el Toro. Something had gone out of him, something of his dominating, arrogance, had ebbed away, and following Nora, he climbed slowly almost feebly, up the steps.

On the porch they heavily back into a chair, then pulling a cigar from his pocket, looked quickly up to see a horseman galloping down the lane. Uncertainly Solon Lowell shaded his eyes against the beating sun, but almost at once Nora whispered, "It's Dick."

He came toward them at a swinging walk, his tall, active figure silhouetted against the sunset, while with his hat he beat the sand and cloud of long riding from his shoulders. As he saw Nora and his father on the porch his eyes lighted.

"We've started blasting the entrance to the tunnel," he called while still a little way off. "Before summer Azure Lake will be pouring its waters out over the old channel."

Seating himself on the top step, he pulled a cigarette and smiled up at them.

"What medicine have you two been making?"

It was his father who answered. "We've just come from Lolito. I've been thinking, Dick, it might be well if she and the little chap came over to take care of the hacienda for you after I go back East. I have also been talking about your future. Dad-lita need ever worry about their future, but I would be more content if she were here where you could watch over her, and over my grandson." The last word Lowell pronounced slowly, with a wistful, unspoken reproach and an understanding smile passed over Dick's face, but for a time he spoked, making no answer.

At last the younger man looked up. "I've been thinking about the future too, Dad. You see—" He hesitated. His voice had lost some shadow of dark peace and restored hope had descended upon the desert. Everywhere than men rode from lowering peon sheep-skin to the masters of the great haciendas. It was as if the dawn of better times were already brightening.

Ca nada first discovered an assaultgy popular and active Prince of Wales

NEVER has there been a more popular or active Prince than the Prince of Wales. And it was in Canada that this fact was first discovered.

When the Prince visited this country in 1919, he was an untried, serious heart-about Prince True, he had been active in the war, but had always managed to keep out of the limelight. On the trip to Canada revealed a young man actively interested in the affairs of the Empire and of his own future, a more youth who wanted only to be looked upon as an ordinary person.

Since many members of the royal family, he is possessed of amazing qualities of endurance and vitality. He seldom rests; if he is not serious-minded, he is either playing polo, squash or golf; or perhaps he is dancing. One may even find him early in the morning out for a run or a brisk walk.

He takes part in games not for any desire to win, or love for the game itself, but simply to keep himself in perfect physical condition and to placate that nervous desire to be always doing something.

Perhaps his most notable exploits are in the field of horse racing. Invariably, it seemed, he would fall—and often he was painfully injured.

But he persisted until it became necessary to take some action to prevent anything serious happening. This also was necessary in the case of flying. The Prince can fly his own aeroplane, but he is not permitted to do so. Our pictures to-day show the Prince caught by the camera topping off his horse, and garbed for a flight. At 7OH he is shown going over the head of his horse, the occasion being in September, 1928. BELOW, one of the reasons why he was forbidden to take part in polo. This was taken after a bad fall in the same year. The photo of the Prince is flying togs was taken during the serious illness of his father, King George. It was this illness that did much to quieten the activities of the Prince and cause him to settle down to more serious matters.

WEST HUNTINGDON W.M.S.

The April meeting of the West Huntingdon W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. Clayton Wright on the 4th. Dinner was served to 24 ladies and one quilli was quilted. The meeting opened by singing "Sweet Hour of Prayer", after which Mrs. Merriam led in prayer. Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Searles. Mata S. Holl was called to respond by "Thanks."

The study book was taken by the Rev. Mr. Merriam which was very much appreciated. "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," was sung. Georgia Pitman gave a wonderful reading entirely disappointed in the first two dances, bethought business were discussed. "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus" was sung and Mrs. McInroy closed with prayer. Proceeds of dinner $6.35.

Radio Wonderful Help, Writes Jim Hurley from God's Lake

Letter Also States Ice Quite Thick in The Lake

"There isn't any chance of us having the ice up here and many as it is only six and a half feet deep, which isn't rubber" writes Jim Hurley former resident of this city from God's Lake, Manitoba, to George Finch of this city. Jim had been living in the small mining village for some time now. He continues—"They are still hauling freight over it and they still have another month to go before the breakup occurs. During the breakup, we will be isolated except by radio.

"I just came in from the hospital, where they are going to perform an operation on a chap, who was badly injured while doing construction work. This chap cut an artery and had several other injuries rendering his state quite critical. Due to the weather conditions no plane could be kept aloft to bring a doctor in, though they tried several times. By radio, they advised what to do, to stop the flow of blood, the man had bled for two hours. It is truly wonderful what radio is doing for this country. There are no radio stations in this community. The other evening I had the pleasure of talking to a party several miles from here by telephonic radio. You give your little speel and then have to receiver to your ear and listen to the other party.

"Here in the country, in the winter snow flies and wind blizzards and darkness. In the summer sand flies, deer flies, mosquitoes big as humming birds. It is never really dark. Now it is possible at midnight to see a man walking and nearly recognize him at 400 yards."

Dance at New Years.

I must tell you about the New Year's celebration we had at God's Lake this year.

The God's Lake social club decided to have a real New Year's eve celebration and everybody who would be nice to have a dance. This decision made calmly was arrived at despite the fact, there was only but 14 ladies to dance with about 60 gentlemen.

The social club printed notices and stuck them on all available town. The townfolk decided that it was a good idea and declared themselves all for it. The ladies, 14 of them married, one spoken for and the other single and the boys. Town regularly, decided that it would be better to have a supper dance which they did, at 8 o'clock.

Well the party finally took place. The ladies were resplendent in their best costume jewelry and metallic dress creations. The boys also decked up for the dance, hunted up clean shirts, unwrapped new neckties and got a shave. The boys his best with a stag line never less than 50.

Then in came the orchestra, a saxophone, a banjo, a guitar and a fiddle. They called themselves "the woodchoppers" but there was no chopping connected with those boys strummed, bowed and tooted.

On went the dance fourteen of God's Lake most favored citizens and the fun was on. Intermission came and there are nearly 100 proficiency badges which they can work for.

They are taught first aid, and realizing that in this world of ours depend upon themselves, they learn to think quickly and wisely, to develop a high sense of honor and the health of their bodies and the strength of their minds.

The training along these lines develops individual intelligence and character. The boys become self-reliant, gaining confidence in themselves — a confidence which is the foundation of character, courage, resource and judgment.

We appeal to parents, service clubs, churches, and all organizations for whole-hearted support.

didn't take seconds for the idea to catch on, and from then on it was rare for a day to make one complete circle of the floor without changing partners.

After a bit supper was served at twelve o'clock the place was rushed through the frosty night, announcing that 1934 was dead and buried. God's Lake people passed a split second caught the significance of the deep throated tooting, cheers went up, hands were clasped, somebody started singing "Auld Lang Syne." this ended God's Lake first annual New Year's dance.

With the Boy Scouts

A Scout's Honour is to be Trustiat. the Law.

All normal healthy boys have an urge for adventure — something that calls for a test of skill against skill, wits against wits, strength against strength.

It was the spontaneous response of English boys to such playadventure, set forth in a book by Baden-Powell, and taken up by Educationists, that gave the Boy Scout movement its birth. To-day it was the play-adventure that appealed, to the Educationists and parents, it was the opportunity of liveness of the character training involved.

Scouting is aimed to develop four things—

1. Character in the individual.
2. Practice of personal health and cheerful happiness.
3. Handicraft.
4. A sense of duty to one's neighbor and to the community.

The boy's character to be formed of manliness, sense of honor and a balanced broadminded outlook.

Good health to come from proper care of the body with temperance and chastity.

Handicraft and co-operation of hand with brain is a fundamental in the training. It is encouraged in such particulars as lighting fires and cooking their own food. The boys have to improvise shelters for themselves, temporary bridges, camp equipment. Handicraft badges and there are nearly 100 proficiency badges which they can work for.

They are taught first aid, and realizing that in this world of ours depend upon themselves, they learn to think quickly and wisely, to develop a high sense of honor and the health of their bodies and the strength of their minds.

IN MIDST OF PEACE, WAR IS DISCUSSED

In an ancient setting, the most ancient topic of all is discussed—war. Fabiano Baroncini, on the Isle of Isola Bella, in the placid waters of Lake Maggiore, at Stresa, Italy, was recently the scene of which highest statesmen of France, Italy and Great Britain met in greatest peace-time meeting since President Wilson went to Paris.

CHIEF SCOUT COMES

Lord Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout, has landed in Canada with Lady Baden-Powell and their two daughters. They are now on the Pacific Coast and elaborate plans have been prepared for their reception in all parts of Canada by the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides.

The movement which Lord Baden Powell, founded, is now 27 years old. Its aim is the development of manly boyhood and youth and helpful men.

Every town and city has some knowledge of the world which is being done among boys by the Scout movement, which encourages and inspires the best that is in the young. The Guide movement is a similar organization working among girls.

That many boys and girls will find themselves through the agency of the Scout and Guide organizations is realized from the results so far accomplished.

Lord Baden-Powell has played a great part in the history of the Empire. He is the man whose name came upon the world suddenly during the South African campaign when he made a name which will live in the annals of national heroes.

But the Scout movement is a peace movement, without association with war aims.

The coming days will be great days for those who are in the most impressionable time of their lives—the boys and girls of these two organizations with these distinguished visitors in Canada to meet and inspire them.

In Belleville revival of Scout interest is being marked.

DISTRICT DRAMA FESTIVAL

A movement which will have far-reaching effects was set in motion here last week with a Bay of Quinte dramatic festival. The Little Theatre in Canada which has been developing strength for the past fifteen or twenty years and has successfully passed through several Dominion drama festivals has a solid foundation on which to rest.

The movement which was launched here is a direct outcome of the local activity of the Belleville Collegiate and Albert College dramatic societies, receiving of course, their impetus towards the holding of a district festival in the encouragement offered by the Dominion festival.

The results are known to all: four schools competed and a former Belleville Collegiate student, Mr. M. Bonnycastle of Toronto, who has been active in dramatic productions and has appeared on the stage, came in the role of commentator and was able to offer advice which will be invaluable in future district festivals. There was also this encouragement that he was able to speak well of the entries.

The very grip which the local school groups on the public is assurance of development in these contests. The enthusiasm of the schools and the staffs was one of the factors which make for the success of the competition.

To Miss N. P. Merry who was instrumental in organizing the festival of secondary schools and to those who in charge who co-operated in her suggestion, Belleville and the Bay of Quinte district owe no small debt, because the work which has been started will have undoubtedly results of importance.

A fine work through the stage is being accomplished for the young students of the secondary schools. So far secondary schools have done the most effective work in the production of plays in and about Belleville, no doubt because of greater zeal and inspiration emanating from these institutions which sponsor them. Yet there is no reason why adult groups should not emulate these schools.

There is really no reason why adult groups outside of these institutions should not take the drama as seriously as the students. Older groups have a wider experience of life even if they lack the enthusiasm of the young students. There would be some advantage of greater continuity in the amateur stage, though when the rapidity of the development of some of the student actors who have taken part in the school productions is considered, their work is remarkable and they are able to make it possible for them to take part in school dramatics for a number of years.

Amateurs have a freedom which even the professional director and actor who are dyed in their work do not have,—a fiery zeal for their work which offers the greatest opportunity for the development of an amateur theatre of noble proportions.

Student actors have given Belleville a fine little theatre and their work must continue to have the fullest encouragement of the people.

FINANCIAL REHABILITATION

The municipality which curtails its overhead, refuses to make capital expenditures and uses reasonable pressure in collecting its taxes, should weather the storm without outside help: at least it should not ask that assistance until it has exhausted these other plans of financial rehabilitation.—Peterborough Examiner.

NEW TREATMENTS

Kidney extract promises treatment for the present incurable Bright's disease, according to a report made to the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, meeting at Detroit. The extract has been under secret investigation for three years and has been tried with unusual and puzzling results on human beings. Some cases improved and others did not, under the tests. The extract is made from kidneys of hogs. It causes a drop in blood pressure of humans and animals.

New treatments for Addison's disease, nauseas and pernicious anemia and a new technique for building immunity against infectious diseases were indicated. Three of the four advances grew out of experiments upon the adrenal glands, which are perched one on each kidney.

Doctors announced perfection of a method by which cortin, the hormone of powerful chemical substance secreted by the outer layer or cortex of the adrenal gland, can be made to combine with charcoal. This compound can then be taken through the lips. In the stomach, the cortin is set loose from the charcoal. It is believed that this will prove a suitable treatment for Addison's disease.

Addison's disease, characterized by changes in the pigments of the skin, general muscular weakness, and derangement of the digestive process, is fatal.

The possibility that cortin, this same hormone from the cortex of the adrenal gland, might constitute a treatment for nagrems and other nervous conditions, was seen.

Sheep were made to respond to stimuli which were so much alike it was impossible for the animal clearly to distinguish between them. A condition known as "experimental neurosis" was thus established.

When the sheep were given adrenalin, the hormone secreted by the central portion of the adrenal glands, their nervous condition was accentuated. But the sheep were calmed when the nervous responses improved by injections of cortin. It was believed that cortin might prove a suitable treatment for certain nervous conditions in human beings.

The use of a cortico-adrenal extract to increase immunity against infectious diseases was seen in experiments reported by Dr. C. A. Fox and Dr. R. W. Whitehead of the University of Colorado medical school.

Removal of the adrenal glands in animals lowers their resistance to toxins, drugs, and infectious processes, and causes a deficiency in ability to build up immune bodies in the blood stream.

DESIGN FOR ACCIDENTS

To encourage safer driving among truck drivers along motor highways a trade journal recently printed some facts based on statistical figures that will be instructive to the pleasure motorist as well. When the statisticians adjusted their slide rules, here is the statement they gave: If you drive over 40 miles an hour your chances of having an accident are multiplied by 50. If you drive over 40 miles an hour your chances of having an accident are multiplied by 25. If you pass another car going up hill your chances of having an accident are multiplied by 10. If you fail to signal a turn or stop your chances of having an accident are multiplied by five.—Christian Science Monitor.

JOHN BUCHAN

Mr. John Buchan is a very unusual man. There has never been anything spectacular about his advancement, but somehow when he appears again and again in a new important position where no one expects him everyone says, "What an admirable appointment!" It has been said that an Edinburgh man is the most responsible of God's creatures, and although Mr. Buchan comes from Glasgow he combines all the best Scottish qualities. And while he has brilliantly excelled in several fields he has never lost his responsibility to whatever job lies before him.—Manchester Guardian.

Among the Chinese peasants 80 cents out of every dollar goes for food. The middle classes in Mexico spend 60 cents out of the dollar on food. When the Mexicans emigrate to the United States and settle in San Diego, where the University of California can study them, food takes 38 cents out of their dollar. That is what the wise American worships family spends. The American people as a whole spend not more than 30 per cent. of their income on food. That would include such gadgets as the "devil". As cultivated in our leading women's colleges, the "devil" starts with an ice cream base supporting a rich deposit of fudge, on top of which rests a split banana holding up a canopy of crushed walnuts under a cupola of whipped cream. Plato never soared so high in his ideal republic.—New York Times.

The things I hold most dear by day
Have strangely little worth
When all the winds trouble tossing spray
And stars march high past Earth.

Those wheeling stars, what can be there.....
More lives, though not like ours;
Yet with their rapture and despair,
With differing dreams and dowers?

So many planets, suns and stars
Go circling through the blue;
Have they their kings and avatars,
Their lives, like drops of dew?

The things I hold most dear by day
Seem smaller in the night;
Toil's worth, fame's value shrink away
Beneath the calm stars' light.

THESE BE CURIOUS DAYS, said the Crackerbox Philosopher. Here I come down town this morning and the first thing I saw out of the ordinary was a naked body tied onto the front fender of an automobile. Swan to man but things nowadays are so peculiar that it takes a deal to make a thrill run down a fellow's spine. As the Good Book says it is a time of great wonders and tremendous changes, wars and rumors of wars, and all that kind of thing, with the end not yet, says the revelationist. But, Gosh all hemlock, even with the daily paper in the R.F.D. box every day few realize to the full what a wonderful world they are living in these days. But shucks, what's the use, says the Crackerbox Philosopher, we're here—bymbye we'll be there, or thereabouts—and, lest we forget, that naked body on the fender was real, all pork and four feet wide—and fine a body as you'd wish to see on Belleville market any day.

STARVATION FACES THE UNITED STATES, according to an article in a current magazine, which endeavors to show that as a result of drought, floods, erosion, government crop reduction, and other causes, the land of Uncle Sam will not raise enough food for home consumption this year. The writer offers Uncle Sam this grain of comfort, Canada can supply all the food that Uncle Sam is short of, and then some, which should also remind Uncle Sam that the big tariff fence erected against Canada some years ago was an unfriendly act, and should never be erected again.

SIXTY-FIVE DOLLARS PER POUND is the price some rich Yankees pay for fish, so it is said. They will go anywhere at any expense to get just the kind of fishing they enjoy. Hence it has been estimated by amateur actuaries that the fish they catch cost them that stupendous figure viewed from a fish market standpoint. Unless a fish that got away must be figured in the ultimate total, and credits must be given for entertainment, for softening of the arteries caused by good company and perhaps a wee nip or two, morning, noon and night; for the sweet untroubled sleep possible nowhere else than the camp with its lullaby of gently slapping waves, orchestra of wind instruments softly swaying the trees in that always weird and wonderful song of the night, the stars and the brooding forest. Also credits must be given for beautiful memories and for the fish stories that are brought home to relieve tedium of business hours—and credits must be given for the better tempers brought home and the benefit therefrom to all concerned. Hence, we submit that $65 a pound for game fish is grossly exaggerated. In fact we would venture to say that estimating the fish caught as the sum total of the outing a profit could be declared, of sixty-five dollars a pound for every pound of game fish caught, taking it completely out of the expense column—out of the red and into the black. All of which is just a prelude to a suggestion that folks who like to fish and seek a place where they can catch fish as fish can learn something to their advantage by bringing their old clothes and tackle to Belleville—within a few miles of this city there being fishing of any kind desired.

We need not hold diplomas to be determined to devote our lives to social service in order to do a little of it ourselves. To be sure, social service has become a very special profession. Women especially, but men, too, go to school and college to prepare themselves for such work.

It requires tact, insight into human nature, fortitude, strength of character and many other things. Nevertheless, if we do not do some social service of some kind, we shall be, indeed, a very soon becoming exceedingly narrow and selfish.

And to be narrow and selfish means that you are not getting the most out of life, only by helping and by taking an interest in fellow man do we round out our lives and make them full and rich.

You cannot be a law unto yourself, or even unto your own family. What affects others directly or indirectly affects you. The conditions existing in your community reflect you, as a member of that community. If they are bad, your sons and daughters inevitably become more or less contaminated. If they are good, your children in turn will benefit.

The salient forces that influence individuals are work, recreation and living conditions. Here are wide fields in which to interest yourselves. Here are vital opportunities that can give that enrichment we all so sorely need.

Put aside your intimate duties, your personal prejudices, and go out and help somebody else. Give where some of your time and attention. Share your advantages with them. Help them, at least through advice, to shoulder their heavy burdens.

It is a delightful feeling of satisfaction to know you have been instrumental, even in part, in righting a wrong or correcting some flagrant injustice, or in lending a helping hand to some other human being.

By contrast you then enjoy even more the advantages you already possess. Or finding someone afflicted as you yourself are, you realize with gratification that you are not so exceptional.

There are many means of performing little social services. Find out what you can do in your own way. Give a little, at any rate, and note the gratifying joy that will be your reward.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Health Hint

Although fruit juices are exceedingly healthful, some people quickly tire of the taste if only one drink is taken for a long period. A good plan is to drink orange juice one week, grape juice the next, and so on.

Another good plan is to mix several fruit juices together. As, for example, mixing pineapple juice and orange juice together in equal proportions.

STEVENS DEFENDS CONDUCT IN PRICE PROBE IN HOUSE

Admits Responsibility For Premature Publication in Papers

EXPLAINS ACTIVITIES

Refused to Apologize to Those Offended by Pamphlet

Ottawa, Apr. 13 (CP)—New angles to the resignation of Hon. H. H. Stevens, former minister of trade and commerce from the Bennett cabinet were thrown on Parliament Hill today as the politically minded sought to appraise the significance of yesterday's proceedings in the House of Commons.

Just as the voluminous report of the commission, with its far-reaching recommendations for the reform of economic conditions was the event in the table of the Bennett Administration clashed with Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, and Hon. O. H. Cahan, Secretary of State. He admitted responsibility for a premature publication of parts of the report in the papers, expressed regret and said the publication had been unintentional.

Then, following tabling of the report, he moved to put the House on record as adopting it. This motion, ordinarily, when the time for the question arrives, is carried as a matter of course. But when the motion is called, as reports of Royal Commissions are made by the government and not to parliament and members are not ordinarily adopted by parliament.

Throughout a long explanation of his activities Mr. Stevens avoided any express criticism of Prime Minister Bennett. He said he was sorry to have to discuss the matter in Mr. Bennett's absence but others had started the discussion.

The former minister said he had not resigned his cabinet post because he had been asked to explain certain allegedly untrue statements in his famous pamphlet of last summer. He had resigned because a full account of proceedings of the cabinet meeting when the matter was discussed had appeared in the newspapers, despite the cabinet oath of secrecy. By remaining in the cabinet he would have placed himself in the position of taking a public organizing assembling could do for no one. There had been a suggestion of a misunderstanding, he added, but he preferred not to discuss it at that stage.

Explaining the pamphlet which led to his resignation Mr. Stevens said he addressed the Conservative Study Club of the House late last session. His subject had been the work of the price spreads committee.

Never Circulated Address.

A shorthand reporter was present. When the speech was delivered by him, Mr. Stevens continued, he edited it and it was "misreported at all points" by the reporters of members of my own expense. I never circulated it. It has never been circulated as far as I know."

A few copies of the pamphlet were sent to representative press men", Mr. Stevens said, and "then it was not published. "I have no apology to give to anything in that speech. It was accurate in the main."

C. L. Burton, of the Robert Simpson Co., Toronto, had prepared the accuracy of the report to the Prime Minister, he said. Mr. Bennett had thanked Mr. Stevens in person. Winnipeg and, at the same time, stopped circulation of the pamphlet.

Mr. Stevens said he was asked to apologize to those offended by his speech. He refused. I declined. I resigned from the cabinet and as chairman of the committee I felt it desirable the chairman should be in harmony with the views of the government."

It was true, as the Liberal leader charged, he had made no speeches on what was going on before the committee, Mr. Stevens said. He did it deliberately so the Commission would not allow him to die.

Going back to Jan. 1934 when the original Price Spreads Committee it was formed at his suggestion, Mr. Stevens said he told the Prime Minister he would take his voice at every possible opportunity against conditions which he believed existed. He said he asked originally for a judicial inquiry with a judge presiding but was granted a House Committee.

The Liberal Leader had charged he served as judge, jury and prosecutor, Mr. Stevens said, "I am not him or any other member in so far as I ever acted as a prosecutor, to show the case indicated that I have been unjust to those, who have been brought before the Commission."

"My fate in this thing amounts to nothing," he said. But he refused to be a mere rubber stamp and if he had any views he would express them.

There had been criticism, opposition and obstacles placed in his path ever since the committee was formed, Mr. Stevens said. "I happen to know thousands of dollars have been spent to find me fine something, that will discredit me."

Mr. Stevens said he could look any man in the eye and state he had played the game. "I have no apologies to the leader of the Opposition, this House or any one else for my conduct on the committee of commission. I might have made mistakes but I tried to do my duty as fearlessly as I could."

The whole argument over publication of the report he described as "Lilliputian" and suggested parliament drop trivialities and get down to serious business of grappling with the concentration of wealth in Canada in the hands of the few.

Mr. Cahan entered the picture by reading parts of Mr. Bennett's letter accepting Mr. Stevens resignation and Mr. Stevens reported by reading his letter in reply. Mr. Cahan referred to premature publication of the Commission's report and said members of the Commission took an oath to report to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and not to the newspapers, while Mr. Stevens said there was nothing in the oath binding members to secrecy.

EASTERN LOCARNO PACT AGREEABLE SAYS GERMANY

Official Communique is Announced by Sir John Simon

ALL NATIONS AGREE

Peace of World More Staple After Stresa Parley

By RICHARD G. MASSOCK
(Copyright 1935 by The Associated Press)

Stresa, April 13—The British announced Germany was ready to enter an Eastern European pact of non-aggression even though other signatories "objected, among themselves accords of reciprocal assistance."

This news was given to the world in an official communique issued by the heads of governments of Italy, Great Britain and France, assembled here in an effort to thrash out the plan for European peace.

The conference itself was informed of the German decision by Sir John Simon, British foreign Secretary, who said the information had been given to the British Ambassador to Berlin by Konstantin Von Neurath, Reichsfuehrer Hitler's Foreign Minister.

The announcement followed a statement by Pierre Laval, French Foreign Minister, the representatives of the three nations assembled here had reached an agreement among themselves as to the program they shall follow in the meeting next week at Geneva of the League of Nations' Council.

A French spokesman said a "step in advance" had been made, which may permit the revival of the proposed Eastern Locarno Pact, espoused by France and Russia in an effort to duplicate in Eastern Europe a non-aggression treaty similar to that of Locarno, also signed at Lake Maggiore.

The agreement announced shortly before the communique telling of Germany's decision to enter an eastern pact, was designed in an endeavor to induce Germany to enter the treaty by exempting her from the military obligations to which Reichsfuehrer Hitler had thus far objected.

Germany's announcement brought a spirit of jubilance into the conference. The delegates explained her offer was a big step forward toward the settlement of the affairs of Europe.

Immediately it was indicated there probably will be called another conference of the big powers to work out the details of such a pact as suggested and to sign it.

Obituary

MRS. ROSE BOWERMAN

Bracebridge, Ont., April 13—(CP)—The Muskoka and District Town mourns its grand old lady following the death last night of 90-year-old Mrs. Rose Bowerman. Last Wednesday morning she suffered a slight stroke.

Born in Prince Edward County, she came here with her husband, the late T. M. Bowerman, more than 60 years ago. She leaves a daughter Mrs. John Thomson, here, and a son, Dr. William Bowerman, of New York.

"There's only one pipe tobacco"

"Yes," said Mr. Picobac as he pushed his plate away and prepared to enjoy his after-dinner pipe, "yes, I know there are a lot of different tobaccos to choose from. But as far as I'm concerned, there's only one pipe tobacco, and that's Picobac

"Why? Because Picobac's a Burley — a Canadian Burley. It's grown in sunny, southern Ontario, where they know how to raise good men and good tobacco. And it's prepared for pipes by men who smoke pipes and know what us pipe-smokers want.

"Yes Sir, give me Picobac, because it is always mild, cool and sweet in my pipe, and I can buy it packed in a handy, rubber-lined pouch that keeps the tobacco always fresh. You'll like Picobac. And you can roll good cigarettes with it, too."

ARTHUR MORGAN McGILL PRINCIPAL

Appointed to Succeed Late Sir Arthur Currie

Montreal, April 13—(CP)—McGill University today announced a distinguished English scholar and educationist, Arthur Eustace Morgan, M.A., had been chosen to succeed the late Sir Arthur Currie as principal and vice-chancellor. of McGill.

The announcement was issued by E. W. Beatty, K.C., Chancellor of the university. It said the governors of McGill "felt that the university is fortunate in being able to secure the services of such an outstanding educationist and able administrator as Professor Morgan has proved himself to be." It is expected the new principal will take up his residence in Montreal, on September first.

Author, soldier and administrator Mr. Morgan has been professor of University College, Hull, England, since 1926. He is the fifth son of the late John Charles Morgan of the British civil service and one of the late Elizabeth Reid Livingstone-Learmonth.

Educated at Kingsmoor Schools, he came here with her husband, the late T. M. Bowerman, more than 60 years ago. She leaves a daughter Mrs. John Thomson, here, and a son, Dr. William Bowerman, of New York.

He is helpless. It is a terrible thought, but such things may be true; but they are rare.

The family physician in co-operation with the Dominion government would provide units and clinics, and the designation of institutions for the reception of cases of mental derangement will ensure that there will be no "railroading" of persons into the large institutions. Under the new plans provided for, persons who become mentally may be detained by a Dominion Commissioner, by his physicians, or by physicians who may be designated by a clergyman in the district, with provision for ample safeguards against hasty action or wrongful use of the latitude.

There is to be changed treatment for alcohol and drug addicts. These will not be thrown into jail for a term but will receive examination and treatment aimed to assist them to recovery.

Undoubtedly, many cases of incipient insanity, and, in its early stages, victims of the drink or drug habit, may be restored to normal mental and physical health by kindly and skilful treatment. That appears to be a main purpose of Dr. Faulkner's amendments to the present law and the commendatory nature of all his proposals accounts for the fact they have been well received in the Legislature.

Tendency Gayer In Drama Entry For Final Test

OTTAWA, April 13—(CP)—When the curtain rises Easter Monday night on the third Dominion Drama Festival here it will start competition among authors of four original Canadian plays, the second number it has produced since its inauguration in 1932.

Any of the Canadian plays, one from the west and three from the east, may win for its performers the challenge trophy given by the Earl of Bessborough or one of the two trophies for the best presentation of a play in English or French. One of them will win for its author the special $100 cash prize for the best play by a Canadian resident.

Executives of the festival have noted this year a tendency on the part of contesting groups to present gay pieces. There will not be the atmosphere of gloom among the last year's shows that was noticed in those of 1934 and numerous comedies will be played.

Proud already of last year's achievement in producing a series of competitions right across the country that were witnessed by more than 300,000 persons, officials have expressed keen pleasure that four Canadian plays reached the finals this year in competition with a total of 112 plays.

They believe the festival, entering its third final stage, has done much to encourage authors of plays in Canada. Before the festival was launched, largely through the efforts of Dr. Augustus Bridle who has made the theatre his hobby, there was little reason for Canadians to write plays because there was no place to have them performed. They believed the movement for a national amateur theatre has provided Canada with a new leadership of plays in this country and hope, therefore, that each succeeding greater as time goes on.

Canadian plays in this year's finals will be: "....And Sendeth Rain" by Mrs. Jacobson; "Bon Ami" by Mrs. Emma Merivier, "Across the Caesar" by Marjorie Price and "To Be Announced" by Mrs. Marr. Mr. Jacobson's play will be presented by the Little Theatre Association of Montreal by Mrs. Morrier's by the Joachim Dramatic Club of Edmonton, Miss Price's by the Playmakers Club of Toronto and Mr. Edge's by the Toronto Workers' Theatre Fellowship.

Nine of the groups performing Canadian plays reached the finals of the competition in other years.

LEGISLATURE MAY END ON THURSDAY

Bill Passed Making Minimum For Rural Teachers $500

Toronto, April 13—(CP)—With just a few more days of deliberations before the session ends next week, possibly Thursday, Ontario legislators today anticipated a week-end rest to recuperate from the strenuous series of "marathon" sessions in which the House sat for more than 60 hours since last Monday and prepare for the final drive to relieve Easter pre-occupation.

Highlight of yesterday's brief session was a sharp attack by Arthur Ellis (Cook, Ottawa South) on Attorney-General A. W. Roebuck's bill to amend the Act respecting costs of the Workmen's Compensation Board. Ellis made no headway and have the effect of confirming replacement of former members by appointees of the present government.

Only other break in the dull passage of innumerable bills was opposition by Wilfrid Heighington, (Liberal, Peterboro West) to Minister of Welfare David Croll's bill to require municipalities receive approval of the Municipal Board before undertaking capital expenditures.

Provision for minimum annual salaries of $500 for rural school teachers and an attempt to curb activities of "adjusters" who settled claims for accidents on the highways, accidents were features of bills introduced.

After Mr. Roebuck explained his bill, which was given second reading, said it was designed to remove any doubt such positions were the gift of the administrative head of management of the Board must be in the hands of the government and not day. Mr. Ellis declared he was "shocked" at such procedure.

Helping the Mentally Ill

(Toronto Globe Editorial)

Hon. Dr. Faulkner's proposed amendments to the Mental Hospital Act, up for second reading in the Legislature, have been well received by the gratifying and unusual experience of hearing plans commended from both sides of the House, and there seems nothing in the way of their adoption.

The word "insane" is to disappear from the Act, to be replaced by the term "mentally ill." The aim of this as the Minister explains, is to remove the stigma that persists in connexion with mental derangement; and this despite the fact that humanity is subject both to physical and mental ill health. One of the important features of the amended legislation is its provision for co-operation with the family physician of those afflicted mentally. Rightly or wrongly, there has existed an impression that there are in mental hospitals—in the countries—persons who should not be there; in short, that these have been "railroaded" into the institutions. This, should be arranged by interested individuals; and once in such an institution the victim is virtually without redress. On ordinance he is marked as irresponsible, unable to look after himself, and the attention will be paid to his protests, which will be regarded as further evidence of his mental state.

ANNUAL HYDRO COOKING CLASSES ARE CONCLUDED

Record Crowd at Final Session Conducted by Mrs. McLean

Hydro cooking classes closed on Friday afternoon with a record attendance of interested homemakers, who reluctantly said farewell to the popular lecturer, Mrs. E. McLean of Moffats, Ltd.

Mrs. McLean, at the close of the session, graciously thanked the ladies for their interest and friendliness.

The class yesterday learned about the baking of fish cakes. As Mr. McLean had explained, the sessions were not merely demonstrations of how to cook but advice on the proper baking in Moffat ranges of everyday meals.

Her hints for better home-making were most practical. Such seemingly small matters as using black-bottomed pans and testing flat-surfaced, or electric elements were stressed by the speaker, who explained that this avoided unnecessary waste of electricity. Utensils should always cover the element on which they are being used.

The proper method of broiling on a Moffat range was carefully explained. The top oven burner only should be used and should be red before the meat is put in. The meat should be placed as close as possible to the top and should be turned after the first five or seven minutes, depending on the thickness of the meat.

Mrs. McLean prepared and baked the delicious dishes in the afternoon demonstration, she talked over cooking problems with the audience and answered any questions.

Mr. Everett Smith of the Belleville Hydro, gave an interesting address on electric cooking, the cheapest type in the city and again emphasized the slogan, "Hydro is yours, use it." The features of Moffat ranges were explained, and at the conclusion Mr. Smith expressed appreciation of all present to Mrs. McLean.

The prizes for the afternoon were won as follows:

Buffet Toaster—Mrs. F. Miller, 68 Cedar Street.

Set Casserole Dishes—R. G. Campbell, 192 Lingham Street.

Mixer—Mrs. Hamilton, H. Leavitt, 124 Chatham Street.

Recipe Cabinet—Mrs. O. W. Munro, 58 Chatham Street.

Write Letters Instead

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Our daughter has been very ill and relatives and friends and neighbors have been most kind to us. We wish to extend our thanks in the newspaper, if this would be the proper thing, as I cannot get in touch with all individuals. Will you please give us the proper form?

2. The minister and the guild of her church sent her flowers. We would like to send a letter of appreciation to them. To whom should this be addressed? Just how should it be worded

R.

1. Please, I urge you, don't consider using this formal way of expressing the thanks that should be expressed personally. It's a very kind suggestion that you extend thanks in a newspaper, thanks that should be sent to us in a letter of appreciation for any kind of gesture that we have planned. But this newspaper thanks isn't the way to do it.

Please do write a little note of thanks to "each and every" relative and neighbor and friend who did thoughtful and kind things for you and your daughter during her illness. Say that you have not thanked some of these people personally — for example, but let her to the others. And I am sure that it will be possible to locate the addresses of those whose addresses you do not now know. There will be no embarrassment when you say, ask, I am sure.

2. Send your letter to the minister, and one to the members of the Guild. Tell, in each letter, of your appreciation of the flowers and for the generous thoughtfulness they expressed, and tell in each one how much comfort that gesture of a little note of thanks to "each and every" relative and neighbor and friend who did thoughtful and kind things for you and your daughter during her illness. Say that you have not thanked some of these people personally — for example, but let her to the others. And I am sure that it will be possible to locate the addresses of those whose addresses you do not now know. There will be no embarrassment when you say, ask, I am sure.

New Arrival

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Please tell me the proper way to let friends know of the new arrival.

N.

You may tell your friends of this happy event in a variety of ways. There will be relatives and very close friends who will be informed at once, by some member of your family. Usually they are telephoned to, or telegraphed to, if they live at a distance. Or written to, if this is more convenient.

When, if you wish to send out informal cards, you may, at your discretion, buy ones that are partly done in. Or you may order them, choose ones that are the simplest that you can find, and preferably all-white ones that all-white ones are so much better taste than the ones decorated with pink or blue, either as edging or as any other kind of decoration. Also choose one that have spaces for the minimum amount of information.

There should be first, the space for the names of the mother and father. Then space for the name of the baby, and the date of its birth. That should be all. No information about where the baby was born.

Then there is the announcement — using the double visiting-card size. Then, a card, neatly attached to it, with a very narrow white ribbon, is the card for the baby, to engrave the name of the baby, and, in the lower left corner of the card, the date of its birth.

You will find many "trick" cards on the market, but these are not in good taste. This important announcement should be made with sure taste and dignity.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

Does Ardent Love Justify a Girl In Taking Friend's Fiance?

Copyright1935
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Perhaps every girl has thought to be decided on its own merits.

Generally speaking, I do not think I should sit back and say that to cause the breaking of another girl's heart an engagement is a really justifiable thing. Every honorable girl respects her friend's love, looks upon it as sweethearts, and behaves herself accordingly.

Is it possible that there could be an exception to this rule? A short time ago I should have said "no." But a few days ago there arrived a letter from someone who is in love with a man who is guilty of this wrong — and yet, I haven't put her on my list of "bad girls" from what you other girls will think.

"I have a friend," she writes in the South," writes Dorothy. "Carl, her fiance, had to come to New York for a few months and she sent him to see us. That sounds all right, doesn't it? Well, I love Carl and I are to love. It happened so soon after I met him that I was swept off my feet. Miss Fairfax, we couldn't have helped ourselves.

"I know that I am not my cousin, May, has had a lot of sweethearts, but I am not built especially pretty. ..d men have never cared much for me, but I am sure of one thing—that is beautiful, and I love him so terribly that it makes me sick to think of him. I believe we were made for each other.

"Things have gone so far with us that it is weeks since we have dared even to look at each other. Last night I lie awake in agony because I have been so treacherous to my friend (until I never meant to be,) and because I can't see any things can possibly come out.

"What use would there be in Carl's going back to May. He does not love her any longer. And, yet, we haven't any right, have we, to ruin two people's happiness? How do tell me what we must do—"

Dear Dorothy: Your letter I am supposed to believe that she is incapable of having deliberately snatched her friend's lover, and it is probably that the thing happened as she says it happened.

But it goes without saying that this new love-affair mustn't be allowed to continue until something has been done. Carl has the ungracious task ahead of him of writing to his fiance and asking to be freed from his engagement, and frankly should write, too, to explain her own part in the affair. All depends on Carl and his cousin.

Let us hope that she is like the northern girl of legend, with the many admirers that she can easily replace Carl. Failing that, we must even be that the two were ill-suited and their love superficial, and that they will be better things out before marriage.

His southern girl has a glorious chance to show that she is generous and big-hearted, and to prove to those who believe that their love is a grande passion, can subordinate themselves to it with clear consciences.

But . . . is he crying for exercise?

HIS little cries go on and on . . . so pitiful! True—a baby must do some crying, just for exercise.

But when he cries too much you're right in suspecting that something is really wrong.

—The trouble may be colic due to gas, acid stomach or that ailment which affects so many babies—constipation. Be ready for these difficulties.

Give the children's laxative

Give Castoria! It belongs in every nursery just as definitely as the delicate powder, the pure soap that guard a baby's petal-soft skin.

For Castoria is made especially for children. It is gentle and safe. Free from narcotics and harsh purgatives. It acts as an intestinal stimulant—not an irritant. It will not upset a baby's stomach or cause griping pain —as strong adult laxatives may do.

Ask your doctor about Castoria next time your baby has his regular health examination.

For every growing child

And remember . . . Castoria is the ideal laxative for older children too. Give it from babyhood to 11 years—for colic due to gas, diarrhea due to improper diet; sour stomach; flatulence and constipation. And as a first aid when a cold threatens.

Children take Castoria willingly. They like its pleasant taste.

Buy the family-size carton. It's more economical.

Overheard at Ottawa

Member inquires about "The Navy"

Dr. T. F. Donnelly: Of what is the navy composed at the present time? Where is it to be given or get it out of the garage?

The Minister of National Defence: There are two destroyers on each coast.

"Enfant Terrible" of House is given a broad hint by lawyer-dramatist of Hamilton:

Mr. Chairman: A great deal of leeway (in the discussion) has been permitted the hon. gentlemen (J. F. Poulin) on the right to ventilate in Canada and discusses the activities of the mounted police within the country but we go on but surely he must not go outside of Canada. Mr. Bell (Hamilton): I'll get out and stayed out it would be a help.

"Tommy" Church asks a question:

"Why should any large corporation attack a man like Harry Stevens, after all he has done for the country?—a man who, more than any Lord Beaverbrook, deserves the gratitude of this country?

George Spotton (Cons. Huron West) tells what the Liberals remind him of:

I am reminded of the republican campaigner who said that he would not go to the polls to vote every time a Democrat was a horse thief but he would say that every horse thief he had ever known was a Democrat.

Members tell about their Prison Experiences:

"I have the unique distinction of knowing what the inside of a penitentiary is like, and also what the inside of a jail is like."—A. M. Heaps, Labor, Winnipeg.

"The ventilators (at Kingston) worked wires, by the way, and I was enclosed in one of those cells, and was also the Prime Minister."—Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice.

"I recall something which came to my own notice during a visit to Kingston penitentiary in order to acquaint myself with conditions there. It was said of the then member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that she climbed the long stairs which led to the Protestant and Roman Catholic chapels at a time when the prison choir in the Protestant chapel was engaged in practising the hymns for the next Sunday's service. As she entered, the hymn being practised was "The day thou gavest Lord is ended." It is said that the members of the choir took one look at the hon. member for Southeast Grey and immediately began the singing of that hymn and burst into the strains of "Nearer, nearer to me".—Senator Bell of Hamilton.

"Jimmy" Stitt of Selkirk Knights his leader:

Mr. Stitt: In the midst of the present discussion in this history of this dominion, in the midst of the present discussion in the history of which this country has never known this great party to which I have the honor to belong is, under the leadership of Sir Richard Bedford Bennett, Bt., Q.C., K.B., etc.

Some Hon. Members: Sir?

Mr. Stitt (Selkirk): I thank hon. members for that laugh. If any man ever deserved the title of "sir" it is the gentleman right justly he conferred upon a Canadian for the services he has rendered, and he deserves it better than Richard Bedford Bennett.

The Golfing Season in the House:

"Take a train leaving any of our cities at noon in the summer and you will find it filled with men going out to the golf courses, all attired out in their knee-high pyjamas and golf stockings."—Hon. J. H. Sinclair, Speaker, the cost of a pair of golf stockings buy two suits for a farmer. The farmer is wondering where he is going to get his next two suits.—Mr. Forke—Tr. F. M. Pickel, (Rosne-Mistaquedo).

Hon. Hugh Guthrie: It may be remembered that I have been somewhat lawful authority and contrary to the rules and regulations baseball was played on the warden's time. In a limited period, until he was instructed to stop it, but I am not sure that that was another outbreak.

Mr. Forke: Why not allow them to play golf?

Victor Porcious (Grey North) speaks up for the Farmer:

"I wonder if the members realize that there are many people contributing to unemployment relief at present. They are paying water from the tap for other people when they themselves are hauling water from wells; who are contributing towards electric light for others while using the reports concerning it by the light of coal oil lamps. Is it not time that some one took it on himself to voice the position of some of the farmers in this country?

Commendable utterance by "Barney" Stitt of The Pas:

"The longer I live the more I think of the truth."

40 Antiquated Horses to Race

Seattle, Wash., April 13 (AP) — Eleven antiquated nags — 40 years of age, all told, and the "dark horses" entered in the ringbone and spavin derby sponsored by the city council and Chamber of Commerce, failed to interest the public in the park system.

One of the two dark horses is a first horse to finish—because maybe it will have to be a horse that gentleman rider, Arthur Chamberlain, is unable to find a reindeer.

The city council is placing its money on its entry, "Deficit," and the Seattle chamber orchestra is rooting for "Process Fee."

Under the rules of the race, the first horse to finish—if there is a finish—will be adjudged a story. A keg of beer will be awarded, if it manages to stagger in, third.

Arrival of Reels Is a Surprise

"What's the idea?" anxiously queried a startled householder yesterday afternoon when reels and a hook and ladder outfit of the local fire department braved through the streets and screamed to a stop in front of an apartment residence on Church and Bleecker, and immediately stalked in, equipment in hand without waiting for the formality of knocking on the front door.

"Don't be alarmed," the reassured firemen, prepared to go to work.

"You tell me," invited the householder, "what's the idea? I haven't seen any."

Although the apartment dweller at his work, members of the fire department, with their reels around to make sure. The householder helped.

Finally, it was found that a neighbor, seeing too much smoke coming from the apartment of the apartment belonged the department believe the flat on fire.

COOL RECEPTION

Addis Ababe, Ethiopia, April 13—(AP)—Hubert Julian, "Black Eagle of Harlem" once connected with Ethiopia's "air forth" received a cool reception today in the capital of the African empire.

Julian, who arrived yesterday by plane, wore a bandage and was apparently perfect but there appeared no immediate prospect of his defending Ethiopia against an Italian threat.

TWO CARS, BIKE ARE IMPLICATED

Vision of One Driver Obstructed by Parked Car

An accident implicating two motor vehicles and a bicycle happened at the corner of Victoria Terrace and Pinnacle St. at 4.30 p.m. yesterday afternoon when an automobile being driven north on Pinnacle St. by Chas. Hartman, of Victoria Ave. collided with a small delivery truck and a cyclist, both of whom were proceeding west on Victoria Ave. When Mr. Hartman investigated Mr. Sullivan alleged, that a parked motor car at the bottom of Victoria Ave. hill had obstructed his view of the oncoming vehicles, as he was about to turn right and proceed east on Victoria Ave. The delivery truck driven by Thos. McCoy, 53 Fisher Ave., was proceeding down Victoria Ave. hill, followed closely by Alfred Lehman, 9 Addison St. riding his bicycle.

The collision between motor car collided with the left rear fender of the truck, later striking the cyclist. Damage to the automobile, and to the pavement the motor car continued a short distance, passing over the rear wheel of the "bike". The matter of damages was satisfactorily settled between the parties concerned, only the bicycle and Mr. Hartman's car being damaged to any extent.

Parliament Hill Hears

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

One night during the budget debate the House was nearly deserted. A back-bencher, contrary to the rules of the House, was reading his speech. The only ones listening to him were (a) the Hansard reporter (b) six highly conscientious members of the House, who feel it their duty to pay attention no matter how futile the provocation, and (c) one member of the Press Gallery. The press galleries were practically empty. A colleague of mine asked "this reminds me of Mr. X, the back-bencher on another parliament.

Some prominent man was to have taken part in the debate, but at the last minute he had been unable to attend, and Mr. X had been asked to substitute. This he did with a good deal of pomposity.

"Mr. Speaker," he said, "I have been called upon to fill an interregnum...." etc., etc.

A reporter for one of the papers referred in this room in the ordinary the following morning.

"Mr. X," he said, "filled the interregnum, but emptied the House!"

Party caucuses are supposed to be the most confidential of things, but sometimes they leak out, and sometimes party secrets get out into the public. Here is usually a row about the leak.

I was told this week about another kind of leak in party caucuses. The banking and commerce committee was sitting all the while which adjoins the large railway committee room in the new parliament buildings. It was usually held. In the midst of the consideration of some bill on interest, members of the railway committee were interrupted by the sound of loud applause from behind the caucus. It was, I am told, the former cattle rancher of southern Alberta, Mr. Henry Herron, Manchester City 1 Sunderland Town 6; Blackburn Rovers 0 Tottenham Hotspurs 0; West Bromwich Albion 0 Preston North End 5; Stoke City 2 Sunderland 2; Sheffield Wednesday 2 Tottenham Hotspurs 1; Birmingham 1 Wolverhampton Wanderers 1; Arsenal 1 English League—Div. Mr. Mackenzie King: "Why does my honorable friend discriminate? What about his own leader, Mr. Meighen? The last time I saw him he was sitting on the floor of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)?

Mr. Lapointe: And I will apply it to the leader of the opposition, and suggest that he stop opposing and start proposing, with a view to changing not only his own personal views but those of his party as well; and I would also suggest to the leader of the Progressive Group (Bob Gardiner) to stop hating biscuits (laughter), no doubt) that last Thursday night, and the health and integrity of the leadership of this group for eating food such as only a Czechoslovakian wife can cook. It's even the whole thing I would suggest that Bishop Lloyd of Saskatchewan marry all these people off, and that all the Mc Kinzers, Orangemen, Knight of Columbus and Native Sons of Canada be allowed to attend the ceremony, as well as the subsequent honeymoon.

One of the melancholy thoughts at the end of a long parliament of any kind is the number of the members are inevitably attending their last session. That is not, of course, the remark made by T. L. Church, in the course of debate last night, but it is true of the present members of the house were, not in the parliament of 1926 as it has to check up; and my figures are the same as his. Out of the 245 members of the present parliament there are only 142 at present in the house. Of the rest, of course, were defeated at the last election. Some are dead, a few by resignation or resigned for reasons of health, or have died or been defeated in by-elections. Of 1930 was not a landslide, but approached a normal majority. It will be a contest with several unusual slants ...not ...not ...not

Daily Short Story

"FIREMAN"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

As often as John Molloy passed the magnificent apartment house near the river-front, so often did his eyes move from their accustomed orbit. For there was a fatal fascination there that kept his blood stirring and his mind brewing visions.

She was a slip of a thing, barely over five feet with gold strands flowing out of dainty togue and a face so piquant that he could never forget the pert tons of her chin or the sky gleam in her eyes.

By a curious—and it might be added—disheartening accident he had learned her name. He had picked up a newspaper in an idle moment in the fire house where he was quartered and there as big as life was the girl of his fancy, under her photograph was a story dealing with the scenes at an Interne and her general views of life and love.

"Grace Denton," the story read "believes that the roles she acts are true, she believes in love and marriage. But she also believes that one should marry in the profession—that an artist should wed an artist, a singer should wed a musician, and an actress should hitch herself to an actor."

So Fireman John Molloy — who was proud of being a smoke-eater —for the first time in his life looked at his profile—and decided he may have been cut out for higher things .... such as the stage .. or screen.....

The "Adonis"

Fireman John Molloy buttonholed one of his newspaper friends, the boys that follow the fire-wagons—and asked him about motion pictures and theatres and how to get screen tests and opportunities. Here and there he began to pass hints about his own handsome features and soon he became known as the "Adonis of the Fire Department."

John Molloy did not neglect his duties in the fire department. On the other hand, his achievements became more spectacular and daring. He knew that by plunging into smoke-filled houses and climbing over rickety, flame-covered boards—he endangered his life as well as his looks. But he decided the game he was worth it. For publicity—as his newspaper friends told him—was the basis of success in the other fields. And at the end of the road—was the piquant face of Grace Denton.

But try as he would—and no matter how many startups he polished the theatre directions and motion picture moguls appeared not to be interested. Thus days passed and weeks and months—and John Molloy was still a fireman. And the only solace he had out of it was that he was in the line of advancement in his own sphere of work.

It was inevitable of course, that fate should finally throw them together. A fire broke out in the apartment house—and John Molloy was the first in top of the wagon. It was quite a disappointment to him to find the fire over and the end of his dreams already on the street. Now he would have loved to have carried her in his arms down the trembling ladder.

But it was an opportunity just the same and he was not the one to miss it. He approached her and asked her whether there was anything he could do. She looked at him impishly with those gay blue eyes and with a faint toss of her chin, she remarked:

"Oh, just smile for a change."

John Molloy was taken aback. What makes you say that, Miss Denton. You will excuse me for calling you by name, but I have seen it so often in the papers."

"Oh, just because I have seen you pass here so often and you always look so grim and stern, Mr. Molloy. You will excuse me for calling you by name, but I have seen it in the papers."

Ambition

He recollected the statement she had made when he first was attracted to her and decided that here was his last opportunity.

"Pardon me," he said, "but I would like to ask you a question. You think there is any chance — for a fireman—let's say—to break into the acting business...?"

He flushed as he spoke, but she only burst into a fit of merriment. "Oh," she laughed, "so that was it —and I had been thinking all the time that you were really interested in me. It seems what you were really interested in is a career."

She uttered that last word in a slightly sneering tone and the man John Molloy was completely baffled.

"You see, Mr. Adonis," she continued, "I had noticed you — for quite awhile. And to tell the truth you are rather handsome. But you'll never make an actor. You're too unbending."

"I'm sorry to hear it," he blurted out, "but I had hoped to be able to make the stage for another reason." And before she had a chance to inquire, he fished out of his wallet a fading and cracked clipping from a newspaper. The same clipping that had scrutinized her views on life and marriage. She remembered it of course. But the twinkle in her eyes grew merrier.

"But" she said, "you believed it. Well, all the more fools you are that time I had been hoping that a fire broke out in the theatre and I had almost been tempted to pull a false alarm."

John Molloy's embarrassment was increasing alarmingly. The other fire-fighters were climbing back into the wagon. He stretched out his hand.

"Well," he said, "I hope we'll meet again."

Still bashful, she replied, "I guess it's up to me to do the prompting. What's your next day off?"

"Sunday," he replied, "Will you meet me?"

"You know the address," she replied.....

So they met on Sunday. John Molloy was at a loss what to do or where to go. But she put him at his ease by suggesting that tea is good enough. They talked about the year they had wasted and about that clipping.

"I prefer a man of action, anyway," she remarked. "Do you still want to be an actor?"

"Well," he drawled, "under the circumstances maybe I ought to continue putting out fires."

"But not the fire in your own heart," she retorted ....

When at last Patricia Canby was freed by the kidnappers she found herself back in the palace of the Maharajah. Only a brief moment had she seen her captors before they bound and blindfolded her.

They had dragged her from the automobile in which she and Roger had attempted escape. Quickly the turbaned leader had lifted her to his horse, and with some of his men, sped through the darkness. Others had forced the young Englishman to drive on.

Hopeless, Roger had to obey, the cause of Pat's disappearance a mystery to his mother and himself. At the frontier his escort, evidently on orders, left them. At high speed Roger Cecil raced for Delhi, to her amazement and horror she learned the reason!

Meanwhile, Pat, surrounded by every comfort, sleepily wondered what this strange turn of events would mean. After the Hindu attendants left her, to her amazement and horror she learned the reason!

"Y" Scores Five Points in Overtime Session to Win City Cage Title from Deacons

Free-For-All Breaks Out in Last Few Minutes

FAST GAME

B. C. I. Seniors Defeat School Juniors in First Game

Coming from behind to knot the score in the last second of play of the regular game, the Y.M.C.A. cagers forced the Deacons into an overtime and defeated them by the score of 27 to 23 at the Collegiate court last evening to give the Memorial-coached "Y" team the city championship. It was a hard fought basketball game but only after the most hectic and ferocious game had ensued.

The fight all evening and plenty of personal contact resulted, being terminated with an out-break, that resulted in a minature riot breaking loose, when players squared off and referees' fisticuffs followed. Cooler heads, however, soon restored order and the more level-headed "Y" team went on to knot the score and the five points tied the two champion five points in the overtime stanza. Previous to the city championship contest the city senior juniors defeated their junior brothers 22 to 26 in a well played school game.

The Deacons led the "Y" squad for the greater part of the game and forged nine points to the fore, late in the last period, finishing with great odds and knotted the score 23 all at the gun. Then the rough play set by "Bucky" Calther and a completed foul shot by Atkins gave the "Y" squad five points to the now-floundering Deacons' nil. Despite the fact the Deacons carried more speed and showed a superior line of defence at times, they failed to rally, when the occasion arose and naturally lost the city title. The fisticuffs that came with only a few seconds to play were the outcome of repeated fouls throughout the evening. Players on both sides took part, but some one was the instigator and the matter forgotten.

Deacons Showed Speed

The Deacons opened fully on the offensive and had garnered five points before the "Y" squad had touched the ball. The teams battled back at rather even terms, however, and the score stood 14 to 9 in favour of the Deacons at half-time mark. Early in the second period, the Deacons literally romped forward as what looked like an assured victory, but with a last minute determined effort the "Y" squad swept all before them to knot the count 22 to 22 at full time. That is history.

Art Cole, elongated Deacon centreman, led the scorers of the night with ten points. Frank Martin, speedy wing for the losers and who scored two baskets and two foul shots but missed a golden opportunity to score in the overtime, when close in. To a man the "Y" team played inspired ball. Calther with his overtime baskets naturally being the hero but Al Wickens' sink for being basket, while Vic White counted six points. Herb Burley travelled at top speed all evening and notched five points, while Atkins counted an equal amount. The "Y" team with a united determined effort deserved the honors they brought to Coach Ralph Morden, owing to the fact they played the entire game with only five men on the floor, no substitutes being present. Faulkner, Cowan and Gentleman were the other point-getters for the Deacons.

GOLF FACTS
NOT THEORIES
By ALEX J. MORRISON

Trying to practice on the course is dangerous, impolite and a waste of time. These are the best reasons I can give for my tip to do your practicing away from the course.

Some players have the habit of swinging a club where they are in danger of striking another player or one of the caddies. Anyswing while you're trying to make a shot, or you'll go back to try a putt they've missed while other players are waiting to shoot for the green.

All attempts to practice on the course are hurried, with one eye on passing players and the other on where the ball might go. It's best to practice when you want to fix up your game, and to play when you want to play. Each must be done in its proper place. A driving range makes a good practice ground.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Staging a hectic last minute rally to announce that Mr. Stickwood is to announce that Mr. Stickwood is progressing nicely. Incidentally Mr. Stickwood is the coach of practically all school sport at the Trenton high school and enjoys the admiration of his opponents throughout the district for his sportsman-like teachings.

A press dispatch from Los Angeles yesterday stated that Fireman Jim Flynn, 55, one time great heavyweight boxer of Pueblo, Colo., had died. Flynn, it will be remembered, registered a K.O. over Jack Dempsey in 1917, but on one occasion for Marzana Mauler turned the tables with a one punch knock out over the Pueblo Fireman. Flynn's ultimate death was attributed to a weakened heart.

Out in Peterboro intermediate baseball circles they've whipped while lower minor league ball is descending to a low level. The old East Peterboro intermediate loop that has produced so many great teams in the past, is nothing but a fond memory, as it has passed out of existence. As pointed out by the Peterboro sport scribe, in years past the East End boys used to be counted upon to celebrate at least one O.B.A.A. victory in the realm of intermediate baseball or soccer. Of late minor league ball has fallen into the doldrums in Peterboro, game is the reign of the old Lakeview juniors, the C. G. E., Raybestos and the International of old days and the advancement of players to the former ranks. With the situation as it prevails in Peterboro the baseball moguls in the Lift Lock City are seriously contemplating the formation of a city league, senatorial ball is the one that existed in Belleville before the war, the formation of the C.O.H.L. in 1919. The proposed Peterboro City League will not be affiliate with the O.B.A.A., but is being formed primarily for the purpose of educating baseball players. Such a set-up would not be a bad scheme for Belleville. A city baseball league could be operated locally, consisting of industrial teams and made up of players who are not quite fast enough for O.B.A.A. ball as yet, but merely need intering.

Judging from the street talk about town a capacity crowd will attend the Belleville Anglers' open luncheon meeting at the city hall on Wednesday evening when Billy Lang and Tom Jull, two outstanding critics of the Toronto Anglers' Club, will lecture and give demonstrations. The basis of the meeting is on the conservation of game fish and the restocking of local waters which should materially assist local tourist trade.

Sarazen Says Golf Grip is Ninety-Five Percent of Game

Valuable Hints Given by Master of The Links

New York, April 13 (CP)—Gene Sarazen, who seldom goes over par, had some sound advice today for the golfing duffer who seldom, if ever, gets under it.

"A proper grip is 95 percent of golf," Sarazen said. "If you pay a lot of attention to the grip, you don't think about anything except hitting the ball," he said in explaining what he believes are the essentials of the cantankerous sport, that has known his mastery for 13 years. "Eliminate all those thoughts about body action.

It was Gene's way of trying to induce Mr. Average man golfer to chase a dozen and one better articles" essentials" out of his head and step up to the ball with the left side and that alone, as a matter for concentration.

"Fresh from adding the Augusta, Ga., masters tourney to the raft of titles he already has to his credit, swarthy bulldog of the links held a clinic in a Broadway department store.

Recommends Overlap

Enlarging on his all-important grip, he recommended the overlap grip with the interlock grip second and the right-hand should be pulled down from the top until four knuckles of the right can be seen by the right-eye. The "V" formed between the right thumb and index finger thus should point at the right-shoulder.

Other institutional gems dropped by the little New York Italian were:

"Take the club back in a straight line with the direction you are hitting.

"I start the club back with my right-hand and start it down my left. At contact (with the ball) the right-hand is the left arm and causes the club to snap. I never think about arms.

"When you come down on a ball in a sand-trap, aim about an inch behind it. By doing so you are hitting straight back and very upright, you keep the face of the club open.

"When I am putting my beat, the club doesn't go back more than six or eight inches."

Halifax Wolverines to Meet Port Arthur for Senior Title Defeating Montreal Royals 7-2

Roughest Game Seen in Maritimes in Many Years

LAWLOR A STAR

Former Kingston Player Scores Two Goals And Assist in Win

By GEORGE C. MURRAY

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Halifax, April 13—(CP)— Lester Patrick was right. He said Halifax Wolverines would take the Eastern Canadian Amateur Hockey title and they left no doubt about it with their 7-2 victory over Montreal Royals in the bloody, bruising fourth battle of the series.

The prize for the National League made his prediction against the betting odds after having the Wolves held to a 2-2 overtime tie in the first encounter and defeated 4-3 in the second.

True to his dope, the brilliant Lawlor scored for the Royals for a 4-2 win in the third and swallowed them whole last night to qualify for the Allan Cup finals against Arthur Bearcats, western champions.

But they took some swallowing. After 13 minutes of concession, Frankie Graham was shipped to hospital to recover from a cold and the effects of his heavy bumping; Lawlor was given the nod and he got out of the game for the rest of the season with a broken knee cartilage, and defenseman Frankie Levinge had a badly torn ear.

Of the Royals, 20-year-old Phil Watson had the worst injury—a cut above the left eye with 13 stitches in it—but all the Montrealers were just about out on their feet.

Heavy Bumping in First

Most of the heavy bumping and slashing was done in the scoreless first period, when eight penalties were handed out and Referee Drew Forsyth was busy shopping Watson with his stick. The injured centreman's place at the Wolves' centre captain and an uproar, that followed lasted 20 minutes.

Royals were playing three men against five Wolves as the second period opened and 20 seconds Lenfesty passed to Lawlor for first Halifax goal and Lawlor gave Hudson the rubber for the second. Both teams were at full strength, when Mosher went from end to end and batted in another. The Wolverine captain was carried off soon afterward, having been laid out while trying to round the Montreal defence.

Trueman Donnelly took a short pass from Watson for the first Montreal goal, Lawlor and Lennon added two more to the Halifax total to make the score 5-1 before the second session ended.

About the middle of the final period young Bobby O'Connor snapped in Farquharson's rebound for the other Montreal goal, but the rally was cut short by "Mickey" McGladsen, who gave Lennon the cleo for the clash Wolverine counter and rocketed the seventh in himself on a pass from Hudson.

CUNNING NEGRO K.O'S. ROY LAZER

Just Took Three Rounds to Polish Opposition Off

By William Wecker

Chicago, April 13—(CP)—Roy Lazer of Paterson, N. J., who had pieced together a string of 33 straight victories, today was just number 18 on the list of heavyweights who tried to halt Detroit's sensational Joe Louis and didn't even come close.

The tall, cunning negro, who is mentioned every time there is talk of a contender for a world championship battle with Max Baer spent not quite three rounds in battering Lazer out of action last night in the Chicago stadium. The triumph, Louis' 18th, straight as a professional, goes into the book as a technical knockout. Lazer's seconds had ended the bout by tossing a towel into the ring.

Louis twice floored the Jersey battler with left hooks for counts of nine. His backed Lazer against the ropes, knocked him sagging with another pair of lefts, then finished him off with a crashing right to the chin. The round lasted 2 minutes and 28 seconds.

The outcome amazed not one of the 17,625 spectators, including the champion, Baer himself.

Marse Joe McCarthy figuratively finds himself with a puzzling baseball machine on his hands. The Yankee phaeton is not the snappy sport model it used to be. A couple of wheels are missing and a fender.

One of the rear tires, the infield threatens to blow out almost any time. And before Marse Joe goes very far up the steep hill toward Cooperstown he may have to have the outfield timing checked up.

The old infield Chapman is a fixture, but Marse Joe doesn't know just what to expect from Combs, after a skull fracture suffered last year, or George Selkirk, newcomer from Newark. Failure by either of these would mean calling on Meryl Hoag, Fred Walker or Jesse Hill, and it has been shown clearly Walker can't hit.

Attack Not Overpowering

Gehrig is the team's great hitter, but aside from his, there are only four with batting reputations—Catcher Dickey, Outfielders Chapman and Combs and Infielder Lazzeri.

Dickey will miss from 25 to 50 games and the same might be said of Lazzeri, but he has attained that figure only once in the last four years.

Potentially the pitching staff is Grade A, provided that lame arm Lefty Gomez showed in training camp responds to treatment, Gomez of course, is tops. Johnny Murphy and Johnny Broaca show promise of greater effectiveness this year Charley Ruffing, a 19-game winner last year, is expected to do as well this season. But Johnny Allen and Russ Van Atta remain question marks after poor reasons, so little being thought of their chances to come back that they were given six-year provisional contracts this season and told to prove they merited being on a major league payroll.

The rookies are Walter Brown, James De Shong and Marvin Duke. These are three very promising flingers. Brown was wild when tried two years ago, but steadied down at Newark last year. De Shong is the former Mackman, Redbird star, a whole season he called more than fair in view of their record. Duke was tipped his opinion of his reserve pitchers when he bought Pat Malone during the spring training season.

Takes Ruth's Job

What the effect of Babe Ruth's departure will be must be left as a guess. Selkirk certainly will be a better fielder and promises to hit better than Ruth did last year.

But Selkirk may not be able to point to a remote spot in the bleachers and park the next ball pitched to him in that region, but he may be a pretty good right fielder, few all that. Ruth and his bat and his color are just a memory now in Yankee stadium. But there are so many memories and here it is spring and we've got another baseball season on our hands.

This year it may be, as Ruth goes so go the Braves.

HIGH GOAL POLO RETURNS TO THRILL CROWDS

Here is Eric Pedley, one of America's best polo players scoring a goal for California against the Texas Rangers and incidentally supplying an excellent action shot of this thrilling sport. Pedley is the man to right of the picture and he has just got his shot away. George Pope, No. 1 for the Californians, is riding hard on A's ball to see that it takes no crazy bounces before crossing the line. Riding on the tail of Pope's horse is Cecil Smith, one of the world's three nine-goal polo players and No. 3 for Texas. The game, which California won eight to seven, marked the return of high goal polo, a sport which has lagged recently.

CANADA'S BEST PRO. BASEBALL TEAM

Though Canada does not provide major league baseball to keep pace with the Canuck hockey setup, two Canadian cities, Toronto and Montreal, have teams in the International a Class AA league. Last season Toronto Maple Leafs produced their best outfit in years with a bustling collection of talent and after winning the league playoffs were beaten only by Columbus in the Little World Series. They will be back this term with a changed line-up but high hopes of repeating. Here are some of the ballchasers who, in training camp look like sure westers of the Maple Leaf. Left: Manager Ike Boone, former Brooklyn Dodger outfielder, and master swatsman and still one of the most potent club-swingers in the game. The popular Boone will again play as well as manage the team. Right is Earl Cook, promising product of Toronto sandlots, who has showed some good pitching in training camp. Last year he was sent to Wilmington for seasoning after a Toronto tryout. Circle: Catcher Jack Crouch, is returning to the Canadian city as first string backstop. Toronto have a working agreement with Cincinnati Reds and hope to get some bolstering from the major leaguers.

IS IT SUFFICIENT?

—By Jack Sords

By BILL BRAUCHER
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

A lot of money has been spent on the Boston Red Sox. Its roster fairly bristles with big names—names of men who were among the most formidable in baseball a couple of years ago.

There are too many "if's" however and too much doubt about the condition of such former stars as Grove, Pigeras and Henry Johnson for the club of a pennant winner, cash outlay notwithstanding.

An Infield Question

The "if's" begin in the infield. The left side of that infield is the best in baseball, with Bill Werber at third and Joe Cronin at short. But Max Bishop at second base brings no enthusiasm from this corner. Max used to be good, but last year he played in only 91 games, hit but .261 and showed what he had slowed up greatly. Ellsworth Dahlgren, a new man from the Coast League, begins the season at first. He has been a good fielder, but a weak hitter, in the minors.

The outfield is not up to pennant specifications, Julius Solters played in two-third of the games last year and hit only .290—which isn't enough. Carl Reynolds, who hasn't had a great year with the bat since he left the White Sox, should better his .301 average of 1934 but it's a guess whether he will or not. Though Roy Johnson is erratic, he appears to be the best outfielder Boston has—at least the hardest hitter. "Dusty" Cooke's abilities have been promising for several years. An arm injury has kept him back.

Mel Almada, newcomer from the Coast League and the veteran Bing Miller are the others.

Seeing is Believing

Off what the pitching staff showed last year Wes Ferrell is the ace. As the club stands right now, he is the one man from whom a great job can be expected. Grove still has to prove he has the arm he used to own. Pigeras pitched only three innings in 1934 and gave up nine runs. Henry Johnson is a question mark.

Next to Ferrell, Gordon Rhodes and Lefty Gomez offer many points to be the leading chicken of the year. The latter won 15 games in his first year.

If Grove and Pigeras show a return to their old form, the club has a pennant chance. The odds, of course, are against any such comeback. The great pitchers of young pitchers—Rhodes, Rhodes, Rocheite, Atherton—Rhodes, must be regarded as the usual number of young pitchers until otherwise indicated.

Joe Cronin, veteran shortstop and manager, won a pennant in his first year as manager of the Senators, despite critics who panned his methods on the grounds he used up his best pitchers. He could do it again, but much can't be expected from him this year with the material he has under direction.

CRASHING BOSTON WIG-WAM

By BILL BRAUCHER
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

Artistically Babe Ruth will not be all that could be desired as right fielder for the Boston Braves this year. He is not nearly the fellow he used to be. Financially, however, he will be a great ball player, whether he can go ten feet after a fly or not. He'll pack 'em in, and that's what the Braves need.

The Braves, with Ruth, add color, but may not go any farther toward a pennant than they went last year when they finished fourth. Pittsburg and Brooklyn, which finished behind them, have improved a lot over last year, and the Braves haven't.

A Few Questions

With Ruth, though the Braves will be one of the most interesting clubs in the league to watch. The Great Man, at the age of 41, playing his first season in the National League, gives the opponent a whole lot of questions they want to see answered themselves.

How will Ruth fit into the Braves' wigwam? There was a story around in the training camps that some of the Boston players sniffed a little as the Great Man matriculated. Ball players are a bit funny that way. Some of the Braves figure that Ruth is not going to help them or the club.

More than a few of Babe's Yankee teammates expressed relief at his departure. More than a few of the Braves hailed his advent not only without enthusiasm, but with no attempt to hide the feeling that Ruth, in his advanced years, is a liability as a ball player, rather than an asset, even though his bat still can boom.

How will this feeling show itself during the season? How will Manager Bill McKechnie react? What will the Boston clubhouse be like if the Babe fails to field a couple that would have been easy for some young rookie and blows a game by reason of his senility?

These are matters that will have to take care of themselves as the season swings along. The fans will go to the park to see Babe belt a few, and to see him strike out. Even now the shadow of greatness that the fans worship lingers over the Great Man.

No Great Punch

How about the rest of that ball club? The pitching is good. It was good enough last year to keep the club in the first division without the help of much hitting. Brandt, Frankhouse, Betts, Cantwell, Bob Smith, Rhem, Bob Brown and Leo Mangum are the staff.

The infield isn't great. Hester Jordan at first (who has been a stubborn holdout by the way) is an up-and-coming ball player. Marsanville hasn't much hope to go at second, and if he fails, there's Les Mallon to replace him, with Bill Urbanski at short. Pinky Whitney still is a Grade A third baseman. Reserves are Joe Cascarat and Hal Finch.

Besides Ruth the outfielders are Berger, Randy, Moore, Hal Lee and Berger. Thevenow, a .300 hit punch when they're hitting, usually. None was up to normal last year.

Hogan, Spohrer and a youngster named Buddy Lewis from the Cardinals are the catchers. Both Hogan and Spohrer showed at bat last year.

The team needs more hitting. All in all, it is not a club that should be ashamed of its right fielder, even though he isn't quite the guy he used to be.

ZURICH MAN IS BADLY INJURED

Driving Car Which Leaves Road And Turns Over in Ditch

Allan Schrag, Zurich, Ont., is in the Belleville General Hospital suffering from severe head injuries received in an accident, as the result of a motor car accident, that happened on the Loyalist Parkway on Highway No. 2 about 10.30 p.m. last night, according to a fellow passenger in the automobile. Schrag was driving and failed to make a right hand turn. The vehicle skidded approximately 100 feet forward and then sideways into the ditch before it turned over twice and came to a full stop, lying on its side. The occupant, Stanley Darling, miraculously escaped uninjured while the motor car, the property of Leggett's Drive Yourself Taxi, was a complete wreck.

Schrag was pulled from the wreckage bleeding profusely about the head and face, while a severe hand injury left him in a semi-conscious condition and weak as the result of the loss of blood. The injured man was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital, where Dr. A. Walters, assisted by Dr. E. C. Kennedy, attended the injured man. Several stitches were needed to close the wide gashes on Schrag's face and forearm, while he continually showed outward signs of suffering from internal injuries. Today, however, Schrag was reported to be progressing favorably despite his severe ordeal.

Traffic Officer Sam Irvine investigated the accident and took measurements of the skid marks on the highway. Following a thorough checkup by the police a group of reckless driving will be laid against Schrag, it being established by police, that he was driving at an excessive rate of speed at the time the car went into the ditch. The motor car was subsequently brought back to the city by Mr. Leggett, the owner.

Those Running For Municipal Office Affected by Bill

RESIDENCE RULE REMAINS JAN. 1

Resolution Passed By C.A.H.A. Over Objection of O.H.A.

Halifax, April 12—(CP)—Over the objection of Ontario delegates, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association voted at its annual meeting here today to keep Jan. 1 as the date beyond which branch-to-branch player transfers cannot be effected.

The Ontario Hockey Association wanted the date shifted to Dec. 15, conforming with its own regulations, but the delegates turned down the proposal.

That would only help the chiefs of amateur hockey," President E. A. Gilroy said to the Ontario suggestion.

To clarify the play-off series rule the clause "best of three" on a point system was substituted for the old intent "best two out of three" with two points for a win and one for a draw a team has to gain four of six possible points to win a series.

"BABE" BLASTS 723 HOME RUNS

Lifetime Record of Busting Bambino is 27 Short of Goal

New York, April 13. — A little stock-taking on the glamorous 30-year American career of Babe Ruth as he prepared to shift his big bat to National League, and perhaps starts another chapter in the saga of making life miserable for pitchers.

Baseball's all-time home-run king has belted out 723 home runs—708 in pennant-winning and 15 in world-series warfare. The total is just 27 shy of his lifetime goal of 750. Sixteen of the licks came with the bases loaded.

Pitchers contributing to the carnage numbered 218. The Babe poled 468 round-trippers off right-handed hurlers. Southpaws were slapped 225 times.

Next to New York, where the Babe sent 346 drives soaring over the pal-ings at the Polo Grounds and Yankee Stadium, the Philadelphia park was Ruth's favorite. He blasted around the bases there 68 times.

Detroit was next with 59 homers, and Boston and St. Louis each provided 56.

Washington was his jinx town. The Babe found the range there only 34 times.

Rube Walberg, now of the Boston Red Sox, is President of the "Babe Ruth Clubs," composed of the 218 pitchers who have contributed to Ruth's official home-run record.

Goes Back After Valuable Papers But is Overcome

Meaford, April 15.— (CP)— One of three persons who escaped from a burning frame farmhouse ten miles from here early Sunday, Mr. Ernest Ptolemy, returned to get some papers she valued and was burned to death.

Mrs. Ptolemy, a middle-aged woman in delicate health, became excited as flames filled her house, and ran inside to get the papers. The nature of the papers she wanted could not be learned. Mrs. Ptolemy reached the top of the stairs in the house and was overcome. Others found it impossible to get back into the building in time to save her.

NOT GUILTY, PLEA

One Merchant, Operating Machine Is Charged in Court

"I have no doubt as to the question of gambling being permitted with these slot machines, but is this machine here before us, this machine that was in operation when gambling was permitted"? was the point brought our by His Worship Magistrate, K. J. Butler, K. C. at the conclusion of the evidence in the first slot machine case to be heard of the 14 local merchants who recently had their places of business raided and their slot machines seized under search warrant. Charges of operating a common gaming house were laid by local police in 14 cases throughout the city, where it was alleged, that gambling was being permitted with the slot machines. The case was enlarged for judgment.

The first case taken was the charge against Mike Marakas, local billiard room operator. The accused pleaded not guilty, Charles A. Payne, K.C. representing the defendant, while R. C. Donnan, K.C., Crown Attorney, prosecuted. The previous question of the absolute jurisdiction by the Magistrate was established and the case proceeded.

"On March 20th" was the reply.

"What did you see?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"When I went in I saw an employee putting slugs in the machine, (at this point Mr. Payne objected, he claiming that the evidence was not permissible, but the witness continued, and later a stranger called "Tex" came in and put a nickel in the machine and got the "jack pot", stated witness.

"What do you mean 'the jack pot'?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"Well all of the slugs you see behind that glass, some four dollars worth," (Again Mr. Payne objected, and later witness stated, that there had been 84 slugs taken out of the machine.)

"What happened then?" asked the Crown.

COURSE CHANGES IN HIGH SCHOOLS

Deputy Minister Makes Prediction at St. Thomas

ST. THOMAS, April 15.—Long overdue changes in collegiate and high school courses of study will be made by the Department of Education, declared Duncan McArthur, Deputy Minister and native of Elgin County, in an address Saturday before the teachers of St. Thomas.

Mr. McArthur declared repeatedly, however that the department will not be stampeded into action but sought the patience of the teachers during the period of evolution.

Introductorily, he pointed out that the growing burdens of relief made it essential to probe the financial picture of the educational system but the educational facilities of the province should suffer. This investigation will soon be launched, he said.

Among the important changes he intimated might take place were a general modification of the secondary school system; the removal of the present barrier between technical and academic courses so that both units would follow a single course of study the setting up of a four-year course for pupils not planning to attend university, with emphasis on subjects available now only at vocational schools; stressing better education so that all children would receive a firmer foundation in their earlier lives rather than concentrating on the latter stages of education; revision of arithmetic for third and fourth book pupils to bring the problems within the experience of the child and placing more emphasis on teaching the mother tongue; experiments to be made to determine the unsuitable teacher in normal schools, doing away with all secondary teachers' certificates and the appointment of inspectors and normal school masters.

Finally, he said that radio will have a place in the school, with initial experiments being commenced over the air on April 30.

DEMAND FOR CARS PUTS INDUSTRY INTO HIGH GEAR

Move Away From Factory in Greater Volume Than Last 5 Years

NEARLY AT PEAK

Current Production Now at Close to 20,000 Cars a Day

By David J. Wilkie

Detroit, April 15—(AP)—The No. 1 industrial colossus of the United States, the motor car industry, is in high gear. In hush away trucks, in freight cars and in drive-away processions the product of the assembly lines is moving from the factory to dealer to consumer in greater volume than at any time during the last five years.

Gaining momentum steadily under the impetus of a swelling consumer demand, the industry has assembled more than 1,213,000 passenger cars and trucks since Jan. 1. Within the next 10 days it will have covered only 16 weeks of 1935, but will have produced as many units as were manufactured in all of 1932. Output for that year, lowest point in the depression, was 1,931,454 units.

Current production is close to 20,000 cars and trucks a day, and probably is near the year's manufacturing peak. There are indications, however, that this rate will be stored. This was the principal features of the 1933-36 budget, which estimates a surplus of $2,616,000 with result from the year's operation.

The cost of living, measured by changes was estimated at $10,000,000 ($48,000,000) for the coming 12 months, according to Economists.

London, April 15—(AP)—Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, reported to the House of Commons today the past year was characterized by a substantial advance toward recovery" as he presented the 1935-36 budget.

"The improvement in trade," said the Chancellor, "has reached right down to the purchasing power of the people. I have been able to find out since direction where a new low record was established for trade and that was in the time lost in trade disputes."

As he began his speech, he was mostly addressed, as was Premier Ramsay MacDonald who entered the House shortly after his return by airplane from the Stresa conference.

Industrial Output Grows

The Chancellor placed the industrial output increase during the last year at about 12 percent, and said the British manufacturing production index had risen from 100 to 112 points, increasing £30,000,000—about $145,000,000.

"The cost of living," said the Chancellor, "remained throughout the year substantially unchanged at a level it was at when this government came into power (1931), with a slight diminution in the thrift of the people."

Outside the House, women carried sandwich boards on which were suggested a variety of ways to diminish the tax on sugar, increased by The Chancellor, arriving in an open motorcar, read the signs and signs reading: "Shell out cuts," "restore cuts," and "work at T. U. Hall, Transport House, or at labor camps."

Improved Living Conditions

Pointing to improved living standards, the Chancellor said the country used 80,000 more tons of sugar last year than formerly, smoked 6,- 500,000 more pounds of tobacco, spent £2,750,000 more on entertainment, and "washed their trouble away in the consumption of 40 gallons of beer."

"Last year," said Mr. Chamberlain, "I said the exchange equalization account showed a profit. I may repeat that this year," with emphasis.

He estimated the expenditure for the fiscal year of 1935-36 would be £729,970,000—about $3,547,000,000, and revenue estimated at receipts indicated he was budgeting for a surplus of £5,618,000, or about $26,250,000 at par.

He derived this surplus figure from estimating revenue for the next 12 months of $735,580,000.

Estimating for 12 months, Mr. Chamberlain pointed out provision must be made for an additional £10,- 000,000 for defense estimates and £1,000,000 for civil defense.

He estimated the income tax would bring in £237,000,000 during the coming year, an increase of £14,000,000 over last year's figures.

The Chancellor announced a reduction would be introduced to correct the anomaly in the sugar industry" and a duty would be levied on rice in the husk and a new duty

PREMIER BENNETT IS OUT FOR HOUR

Takes Motor Drives in First Appearance Since February 24

Ottawa, April 15.—(CP)— Prime Minister R. B. Bennett emerged Sunday from his hotel apartment and took a drive of more than an hour, the first time he had been out of doors since Feb. 24, when he was stricken with an acute infection of the respiratory passages. The weather favored him and his step had buoyant than customary, the result of more than six weeks' confinement.

It is understood the Prime Minister will be out again tomorrow if the weather is suitable, for a longer period, and if his improvement continues he will leave the end of this week for London to attend the King's Silver Jubilee.

City and District News

DEAD PHEASANT SEEN ON ROAD

Evidently struck by a car, a dead male pheasant was reported seen by a local man on the side of No. 2 Highway just west of the Ontario School for the Deaf, early Sunday evening. The birds are reported to have undergone a noticeable increase in numbers during the past year or so particularly in the section just west of the city, and are fairly tame.

MUSKRAT CATCH IS QUITE LIGHT

Although trappers have been active through the district since the start of the season so far this year the muskrat catch is reported to be a disappointing one. The quiet severity of the winter two years ago, which accounts for considerable loss in their ranks, and the constant trapping during the past several years, is believed responsible for the comparative scarcity of the animals. Reports from outside centres also indicate, that the season will be a poor one throughout the Province. The value of a pelt at present is indicated by local furriers.

CITY QUARRY MAY NOT BE OPERATED

Any hope that quarrying operations might be carried on in the city quarries this season is dispelled by the fact, that at present the stock piles of stone crushed and heaped up last year still contain a large amount of material for the necessary road patching and repairing during the summer, it was stated today by City Engineer Chas. A. Mott. But whether or not work will actually be done is a little too early to forecast yet, it was added.

BRIGHT WEATHER BRINGS CROWD OUT

While window curtains wafted to and fro through wide open windows in homes throughout the city, and hundreds strolled in their spring finery through the residential and downtown streets yesterday on the unmitred Sunday of the year, other hundreds took the opportunity of the simmer-like weather to enjoy their first touring trip in family cars. Highways east and west of the city were blackened with the machines, the occupants bent on the first exploratory trips of favorite picnic grounds and recreation centres. Nearby woods were filled with the first spring parties in swarms, and marches were invaded for the tempting clusters of pussy willow branches. Gas stations reported the first actual rush of the season, with business about as good as that of any average summer Sunday.

FIRE BRIGADE FOR BANCROFT ORDERED

Bancroft Village is to have a volunteer fire brigade for the protection of the community. It was decided at a meeting of the village council held last week. At the meeting Councillor Carlisle was appointed Fire Chief and has been instructed to organize the brigade, each man selected by him, to be paid for his services at a fire, an insurance policy is also to be taken out to protect the men engaged. It is expected that a new motor chemical truck and pumper and a ladder truck will be purchased, together with new hose.

SIDNEY FARMERS TO MAKE COMPLAINTS

Juvenile rabbit hunters with .22 rifles and air guns in their hands, invading their property and shooting promiscuously at any moving object, will probably be the object of formal complaints by farmers of Sidney Township just west of the city to provincial police headquarters.

Careful watch of their grazing herds now in pasture is being kept by some farmers following the discovery by one owner of a spent .22 rifle bullet in the hide of one of his cows. In some cases fences are reported broken down and pasture gates left open.

OIL TANKER MAY BE FIRST TO ENTER

Whether the skipper of an oil tanker or a coal carrier will receive the proverbial plug hat as the master of the first boat to officially open the season's shipping from the local harbor this season by ringing first to enter remains to be seen it was indicated in marine circles today.

Although a heavy oil tanker plowed its way into port through thick ice long before this date last year, so far there is little activity noted at the local port with no promise of immediate entry by any type boat. Boat whistles may not resound in the harbor until about the end of the month it was stated at the office of the British American Oil Company who expect a tanker at about that date.

Notice has not been given the Schuster Coal Company of any carriers being despatched up to the present time, it was reported.

MURRAY CANAL OPENED SATURDAY

With bridge tenders and lightkeepers resuming their duties on Friday, navigation on the Murray Canal was declared open on Saturday. For the first time this season, Presqu'ile Point light was burning on Friday night.

RETREAT OPENS FOR THE MALE SEX

Rev. John Knox, S. J. Delivers Inspiring Sermon

Rev. John Knox, S.J., continued the Retreat for men at St. Michael's Church, last evening at seven-thirty. The attendance of young men boys was magnificent, thronging the church as the women had done on previous days.

The eloquent missionary spoke on subject that Almighty God expects a reasonable service from mankind. There is work God demands from every rational creature. First, He expects belief in Himself from man. God has supplied the material for the work. Man using his reason may conclude from things created to the Creator thereof. In the same way he does the work of believing in the divinity and claims of Our Divine Lord. The claims of Christ are proved by His words and His works.

Secondly, this work of believing also implies the duty of living a life in other words our belief must be translated into action. Religion consequently must be carried into every department of life, into the world of politics, into the world of business and also into all the most intimate relationships of human life. Thirdly it also implies the duty of religion, that is responsible for the chaotic condition of affairs in the world today. The solution, then, is the recognition of God's rights and keeping of His law. We hear much of the distress of "the forgotten man" but as the author has well stated, "there would be no forgotten man if God were not forgotten by men".

The missionary attended a cordial invitation to all to attend the exercises of the Retreat. The subjects of this evening's sermon is seven-thirty will be "Success and Failure".

Masses this morning were well attended at six, seven, eight and nine o'clock.

QUARTER SHOWS HYDRO SURPLUS

Belleville Hydro Commission welcomed back today its chairman, Mr. M. R. Duff, who has been ill for some time. Mr. Duff acknowledged the kindness of the fellow commissioners C. S. Rad and Mayor Tice, and of the manager and secretary Mr. C. O. H. Scott, and staff, during his illness.

Commissioner Tice was not present at the meeting.

The local commission concurred in the progress of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission which comes upon all municipal commissions to conduct a campaign with the co-operation of local dealers and the manager Mr. Scott was authorized to get in touch with dealers to have this campaign put on a range selling.

The Commission concurred in the recommendation of the executive of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association that no Commissioner should be entered into without consent of the Hydro Electric Power Commissioner through the executive of the O.M.E.A. The Commission also concurred in the recommendation that the O. M. E. A. should be represented on the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission.

Belleville Hydro System continues piling up surpluls, the first quarter of 1935 showing accumulated surplus of $4,908.36 as compared with $3,260.36 as against 1,483.94 on March 31st, 1934. Part of the reason for this was a lower interim rate for the current. The revenue of the recent quarter was $47,833.85 as against $40,730.47 for the quarter ending March 31st, 1934. All classes of power returned increases, the largest being domestic which is forced to the large sales of heaters and ranges.

"The cooking school last week was a tremendous success" said Mr. Scott.

Mr. Reid voiced his pleasure at welcoming Mr. Duff back to his place in the chair, Mr. Duff referred to the wonderful assistance in which you carried on while I was away. I cannot express in words what I feel."

DRENCHING RAIN NEED OF DISTRICT

Ground Quite Dry And Fall Wheat is Suffering

A drizzle of rain falling over the district today developed into a drenching downpour and gave promise of bringing greener pasture fields throughout the section and hastening the delayed growth of grain now slowly shooting through the ground.

"We need the rain badly", commented Mr. Wm. Michael, Dominion seed inspector of the district, "So far this spring we have had comparatively little rain and the ground is very dry. Fall wheat, particularly, through the front townships of Hastings has been dried out, and unless conditions improve within the next week or so the crop of this grain will be a slim one. It's a little too early to tell yet, however."

Myself from a trip through the Lindsay-Peterboro district where he had been engaged for the past several days on grain inspection, Mr. Michael declared that agricultural conditions were favorable in that area and more moisture was shown in the land than Belleville further south.

"About three days rain is what is needed in this district to put everything in shape", added the inspector.

Police News

While transporting two boys to the Industrial School at Bowmanville, one of them escaped from the police automobile driven by Inspector in Belleville on Saturday afternoon. Despite the fact local police assisted the Kingston official to endeavour finding the boy, he made a successful escape. According to the Kingston Inspector he was last reported at a local service station, but failed to return. Further clues revealed that the youth was seen running eastward on the C. P. R. right-of-way. A west bound freight was just passing through the city, leading the authorities to believe that the lad boarded it and made a successful escape.

William Howard, 24 Station St., reported a minor accident to the police station, after which he was in no way responsible, authorities stated. The accident which Mr. Howard was driving his truck on Meyers St., when little Willie Hamilton, 3 years old, appeared and ran after the truck as larger boys were trying to board it, but without success. The little fellow fell and badly cut his face. The truck did not proceed, however, and stopped to render all assistance possible. The family physician was summoned and little Willie removed to the Belleville General Hospital, where he received medical aid.

Twenty seven transients were afforded warm, sleeping quarters at the police station over the week-end. The names were taken by Constable Forrester at the sergeant's desk on Saturday night and 14 on the Sabbath. Following registration, the police department quite busy over the week end.

POLICE COURT

A heavy police court docket was presented before His Worship, Magistrate Ponton, K. C., this day, that lasted until noon. Numerous charges were heard and disposed of, the majority of which were fines.

William O'Dowd and Louis Manville, two employees at the Trenton Airport Relief Camp, pleaded guilty to charges of assaults in a local fray. They were given one month each in the common jail. The case was presented by the O. P. P. during which it was established that Manville and O'Dowd were intoxicated and started an altercation that resulted in practically a free-for-all fight. O'Dowd received injuries, that necessitated his detention in the local hospital for one week. The affair took place on April 6th last. "There has been absolutely too much of this disorderly conduct reported from the Relief Camp No. 28, and it must cease, one month in jail", terminated His Worship.

Glencoe Brickman, Prince Edward County, pleaded guilty to a charge of the theft of a spot-light. He was given a suspended sentence, upon the payment of the costs of the proceedings. Brickman admitted stealing the spot-light from an Amelisburg neighbor. His previous good character was referred to and materially assisted in the leniency shown by the court.

Morris Kohen, Deseronto, requested an enlargement in his case. Kohen was charged with the illegal possession of liquor following the searching of his car by local police, while it was parked at the Dundas St., tourist camp. His request was granted.

Four local citizens, all charged with being intoxicated, were further enlargements in their cases. They also saw their desire fulfilled.

Catechumen Class of 22 And 34 Others Are Received

Twenty-two members of the catechumen class of Christ Church were received into full membership by Bridge Street United Church on Sunday morning, the Rev. Dr. James Semple, minister, officiating. The service was deeply impressive and was followed by the Communion of the Lord's Supper. The church was filled with worshippers who took part in the ceremony.

The choir sang Bizet's "Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world" after which the minister addressing the catechumens said in act of reception:—

"Dear Beloved: As we now receive these persons into the fellowship of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and His Church, so may we be ready to profess publicly their faith in Christ, remembering how great their baptism and entering upon the active duties and full privileges of Church membership, let us hear the gracious words of the Master and invoke on their behalf the blessing of the Father.

"Jesus said: 'I am the door; by Me if any man enter in he shall be saved and shall go in and out and shall find pasture.' (St. John X:9).

"Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men, him will I also confess before My Father who is in Heaven.' (Matthew X:32).

"We rejoice in the progress of your Christian Training which has brought you to this place. In the days of your infancy you were by Baptism claimed as the children of God and engaged to be followers of Jesus Christ. God in His mercy has now spared you and you have been trained in the essential doctrines of Christian life and fellowship. Of your own choice you now come to take upon yourself the responsibilities of Christ's disciples and openly to join the communion of His Church.

"It is God's gracious provision for the needs of His children that has led you at this hour. It is His loving kindness at this time to graciously guide you all the way through life.

Do you desire now to confess your faith in God our Heavenly Father, and to accept the place in His family and fellowship claimed for you in Baptism.

"(Answer I do.

"Do you accept Jesus as your Saviour and Lord and do you now promise, with His help, to strive to live in a manner worthy of His name.

Trenton Conservatives Tax Capacity Committee Rooms

Hear W. A. Beynon, M.P., of Moose Jaw Discuss Issues

Trenton, April 15.— (Special)— The Trenton South Hastings Conservative Association were more than pleased with the meeting on Friday evening, when the new committee room on Front Street was taxed to overflowing to hear W. A. Beynon K.C., M.P., of Moose Jaw, Sask. Howard D. Graham, K.C., president of the local association acted as chairman of the night. In his remarks he stated, that it was most pleasing to see the large crowd, including many, who have not been seen since before the election last summer. The president said, that the men had completed their work in organizing and the ladies would meet on Tuesday for the election of officers. The Trenton "Young Canada" club will meet on Wednesday night and get started on their program for the coming Federal election. The president gave a review of the work of the leader, Hon. R. B. Bennett, prior to taking power in 1930. Mr. Bennett was always thinking of the future of Canada and in the days of prosperity he asked Mr. King, who was in power what he was going to lay in store for the gloom after good times. He was not heeded and before the King government was defeated the depression had set in with hard times on our hands, when the Bennett government started its task to better conditions which they went into power in the fall of 1930. Mr. Graham had met Mr. Beynon at Ottawa as the main speaker had arrived with W. E. Thomson, who called to When Mr. Thomson was called to introduce Mr. Beynon, the hall rang with cheers. Before the introduction, the speaker congratulated the new officers and paid tribute to the former President, Mr. Allen James, who headed the local Conservatives for over fifteen years. He challenged any member of the opposition to show, that the Bennett government was responsible next to God for the depression, or for the loss of markets he claimed, were these markets, the manufacturers lost before the present administration took office. He stated, did that the Bennett government did not trade with the United States with tariffs.

This was done at the short session of 1930. Following a short session of the Economic Conference of the Empire the very life blood of Canada and if the depression had not been on, this alone would have swept any government back into power, Mr. Thomson, in closing, he assured the audience that they be assured the addition to ton, that tenders for the Dominion the Post Office would soon be called. He then called upon Mr. Beynon and introduced him to Trenton conservatives. Mr. Beynon had never visited here before but had spoken to the Sidney and Thurlow electors!

Policy Set Down

Mr. Beynon said, that the policy of the Conservative Government was set down in the radio addresses of the Prime Minister. Elections should be changed in the past twenty-five years, he said and the people do not want to hear ancient history. Now the electors ask "What is the policy of those who are seeking our franchise." He asked: "Let it be the election campaign, when the war waged in Canada". The Conservative party always led the way in sticking to the issues and forgetting personalities. He spoke of the startling speeches of R. B. Bennett and the task he took, when the times were bad when the government took over the reins after the King administration, am proved to go down in error doing the best thing for the people, in raising the speaker. He stated that the people will never realize what the Prime Minister has done through in the past five years and he told the gathering that the leader would be in the harness after the Easter recess. (Cheers.)

The speaker gave his listeners a glimpse of the situation, when the government took office, the markets were closed to the countries of the world, the railways were earning less than ever before, crop failures, falling revenues and increased relief. He told everyone present that what was their duty to make it known, what the trade agreements have meant to the thousands, who found employment, that otherwise would be out of work. The Liberals could abrogate these agreements if returned to power. The exact facts must be presented and the truth not stretched. "Nothing sounds as good as the truth," he said. It is not the truth we hear from the other side. They tell that the Conservative government is a tool of the great interests. This the speaker said was a falsehood, took figures from the income tax rate under the King and Bennett governments. The King government rate was far lower for the rich than at present. He concluded by asking, that not one figure be twisted and always give the truth. It has to is done the Conservative government will build a government for our children and our children's children on the confidence of our people.

Wrestling Card Pleases

Three of he best wrestling bouts ever held in eastern Ontario were witnessed at the Airport on Thursday night by some seven hundred fans, who were standing up as often as they sat. Mons. Le Duc of Montreal was attended than ever before and we wonder if they come to learn some new holds. The card was held with the permission of Wing-Commander G. O. Johnson, officer commanding the R.C.A.F. air station. The proceeds go to the sports fund of Relief Project No. 28. Sgt.-Major Witherby announced the contestants with Sgt. O'Neill at the bell. James Saylor of Trenton, former Dominion intermediate heavy weight wrestling champion refereed the bouts. He had plenty to do and was called upon to do a little of the grand and round to aid defence. The first bout of one fall, with a thirty minute limit, was won by Harry Farwell of Ont. Ag. College and A. C. of Toronto over Torchy Crisp of Perth in 24.30. Also of Toronto. These lads were in the 160 lb. class and very fast. Farwell was full of unorthodox holds which had the fans continually hollering "kill him" or "break his neck". Crisp was more methodical and pleased the crowd. Saylor refereed splendidly when Farwell tossed him over the ropes to the cement floor of the hangar, fortunately for Crisp and Farwell, when he consistently held his head over the iron and narrowly missed it. Crisp. After 24 minutes Farwell gained the fall after a back slam, that kept Crisp on his mat as Farwell held him for the decision.

Meyers vs. Engblom

Waldy Meyers of the Todmorden A.C. and Sandy Engblom of the Central Y.M.C.A. thrilled the crowd with their rough exhibition. Meyers is the Canadian 135 lb. champ, while Engblom is the 145 lb. title holder. The extra weight seemed plenty for Engblom. The first fall came after 13.39 minutes, when Engblom got an arm scissor. During the match encounter Meyers tossed Engblom from the ring and started after him. They tangled in the crowd and beat Engblom for a count. Referee Saylor ran after Saylor and the cash customers got them separated and back in the ring. Another arm scissor and after a few slams netted the second fall for Engblom after 24. The bout was the best of three falls with a forty-five minute limit.

Allan vs. Lawson

Jimmy Allen, ex-lad Y.M.C.A. lightweight champ and Phil Lawson, Argonaut Rowing Club, former champ, tangled for the third time before the local grunt and groan fans. The last meeting was hailed when Allen received a sprained ankle and Lawson two cracked ribs. Lawson is the bad man of the ring and when he entered the ring he was greeted with boos. Allen was cheered as he entered with his famous smile, from ear to ear. Allen gained the first fall after 21.00 minutes, after he slammed Lawson to the floor several times and applied the arm scissor. Nine minutes later Lawson bounced Allen so often to the floor, that he gained the second fall and referee Saylor had to carry Allen to the dressing room. When the lads returned to settle the dispute, Lawson complained of a sprained hip and pad hand over Allen's face. He did this previously but the referee did not look into the matter. Saylor clopped the bout to me about the tape. Lawson refused and the crowd stood up and booed him continually. Finally Lawson let the referee remove the tape. The scrap got so bad that the referee got tangled up and was floored and his shirt almost torn from his back. The crowd were ready several times to storm the ring but Allen finally slammed Lawson to the floor and gained the decision two minutes before the hour limit was up. The crowd gathered around and cheered Smilling Jimmy Allen as he left the ring.

The card was exceptionally well and any person who missed the show was sorry after they heard the criticisms.

Three Accidents

Three accidents were reported to the local police on Friday, No persons were seriously injured although much damage was done in two cases. Mrs. J. G. A. Stevenson of Maple received a cut on the forehead, that was attended to by Dr. A. C. Drinnell after a car, driven by her husband, left he road about two miles west of Trenton, and broke off a pole on one side of the road and traversed into the ditch on the opposite side. $600.00 damage was done to the car.

About 3.30 p.m. a car owned by Dr. Driscoll and a car owned by Walter Dixon and driven by George Stoneburg, collided at the intersection of King and Queen Sts. Mr. Doris Hayes, a passenger in the Dixon car received a slight cut, that was dressed by Dr. Driscoll. Both cars were slightly damaged.

Shortly after 1.15 p.m. a large transport truck of Langley's Ltd., of Toronto slid into the ditch west of town and damage was done outside of a slight tear in the roof of the truck. The driver and passenger were uninjured.

Pedestrian Injured

Goldwin Fraser, Smithfield, received severe scalp wound on Saturday night when he was struck by a protruding object on a truck, as he passed. Fraser was walking along No. 2 highway west of town, when he heard a truck approaching. He walked closer to the shoulder but as the truck passed he was struck by the left side of the head. The driver did not stop and Fraser reported of Dr. Reid, where it was found, that five stitches were required to close the wound. Today Fraser is none the worse for his accident, although it might have been more serious.

"PATH OF GLORY"

Florence Turner, the first actress to have her name flashed across a motion picture screen and who, a quarter of a century ago, had the movie-going public at her feet, is now an extra in the world's most exacting picture, recently as the girl she was pictured recently as the appears as a dress extra in a picture now in production. Miss Turner spurns sympathy.

Conservative government is a tool of the great interests. This the speaker said was a falsehood, took figures from the income tax rate under the King and Bennett governments. The King government rate was far lower for the rich than at present. He concluded by asking, that not one figure be twisted and always give the truth. It has to is done the Conservative government will build a government for our children and our children's children on the confidence of our people.

POLITICAL ALIGNMENT IN ALBERTA MAY CHANGE

General Election in July is Predicted by Leaders

Edmonton, April 15.—(CP)—Sending Alberta's leading personalities into the battle, Social Credit today appeared to bring about a new political alignment in the province. Premier Parvell of the Social Credit party in the province, probably in July lent order to supporters of fire to opponents.

While the United Farmers of Alberta Government has obtained Major C. H. Douglas, British Economist and founder of Social Credit principles, as economic adviser, J. E. Brownlee, former premier and other leaders of the U.F.A., came out in opposition to Premier Aberhart and Douglas or Aberhart proposals.

D. M. Duggan, Conservative leader, came out flatly against Social Credit, declaring it was futile and impracticable. W. R. Howson, Liberal leader said as soon as the Social Credit measures which had been passed by the Alberta Social Credit could be applied to any one province as well as the Dominion as a whole. It was within the power and jurisdiction of the province, he declared.

Mississippi's supreme court has decreed that Dr. Sara Ruth Dean must serve the life imprisonment sentence meted out to her for the "poisoned whiskey" death of her fiancee friend, Dr. John Preston Kennedy, prominent physician of Greenwood, Miss. An order of executive clemency for a reversal of the supreme court's decision on the conviction of error remain as Dr. Dean's only means of escaping imprisonment for life.

If It Rains .....

By ROBERT GEIGER

Guymon, Okla., April 15—(AP)—Three Ill wents — achingly familiar on a western farmer's tongue rule life today in the dust bowl of the continent—.

If it rains....

Ask any farmer, any merchant, any banker what the outlook is, and you hear them—if it rains....

If it rains....some farmers will get a wheat crop.

If it rains....fresh row crops may flourish.

If it rains....pasture, and range for livestock may be restored.

If it rains...., fields quickly listed into wind-resisting clouds may stop the dust.

If it rains....it always has!

The next three weeks will tell the story.

The southwest is big and the dust area is only a small chunk of it. Roughly, it takes in the western third of Kansas, southeastern Colorado, the Oklahoma panhandle the northern two-thirds of the Texas panhandle and northeastern New Mexico.

It always has been a region of sparse rainfall. The great war, with its high wheat prices and resultant demands, sent the plow into the sod and turned this into wheat country. Before them it was grass land, and the crop was native Buffalo grass, which held the soil firm against insistent winds.

LEGISLATURE ON FOUR DAY DRIVE

Will Try to Wind up Business to Prorogue Thursday

Toronto, April 15—(CP)— The Ontario legislature took on a new lease of life today when members returned from a week-end rest after last week's acrid all-night sessions ready for the four-day drive necessary to achieve Easter prorogation.

Government plans call for winding up the session by Thursday at the latest. This will mean working at top speed because the estimates have yet to be considered and there are still considerable bills on the order paper.

Main question in the minds of legislators is whether Attorney-General A. W. Roebuck's police centralization bill, opposed vigorously by Conservative leader it received second reading, will be discussed in committee or shelved until the promised fall session. During Thursday's sitting the premier will announce what dates on the order paper to be taken up in committee, and possibly even in favor of 24 other bills.

Amalgamation Bill Up

Minister of Agriculture Duff Croll's Windsor Amalgamation Bill designed to create a greater Windsor from the four Essex border municipalities of Windsor, Walkerville, East Windsor and Sandwich is one of the major measures, which has not yet received second reading.

Work of the Private Bills Committee has been particularly congested. The Fish and Game Committee, however, has considerable work to do. The bill amending the Fish and Game Act to permit use of dogs in hunting has been referred to this committee and a lively argument is expected, many members on both sides of the house objecting to lifting the ban on dogs.

With the government stand on the Quebec power contracts announced through passage of the cancellation bill future developments in the Hydro situation will hinge around efforts to negotiate with the companies. The bill will not become law until proclaimed by the Lieutenant-Governor. This postponement will make possible the negotiations of the premier by Mr. Roebuck in the debate before the bill received third reading.

If It Rains .....

Note Leaving

Despite the hardship, and a generally unencouraging prospect, not a single one of more than 100 farmers interviewed by your correspondent was leaving the country. Each one had hope of getting a crop.

Take Charles Hitch, elderly rancher-farmer, living south of Guymon, who came here in 1886.

"For the first time since I have been on Coldwater Creek—and I was the first settler—we are thinking of shipping cattle to greener pastures," he said.

"Recent dust storms are not much more severely than others in former years," Hitch said, "but the drought is worse.

"My ranges have supported as many as 10,000 head but I have only 400 head now and they cannot find sufficient feed. We have to feed them cottonseed cake.

But cattle prices are on the upgrade and I am not discouraged. We even will get a wheat crop if rain comes. If there is no rain, we will have to ship. Shipping cattle in a few weeks."

A. L. Thereson lives over the line in Texas and is a big wheat producer. He raised 90,000 bushels in 1931, got only 5 cents a bushel for it. The best he can hope for, he thinks, is a half-crop.

Not Suffering Acutely

"But we are not suffering acutely," he added. "The government is paying better than a dollar an acre to us in wheat benefit payments and in addition we can sell what wheat we raise. That will keep the farmers going. The federal wheat program is ok, and it wasn't for that the farmers would be in an awful hole. They can hold on indefinitely with wheat payments.

And then there is J. R. Bryan, farmer northwest of Guymon, who could have left 10 years ago after 30 years of farming in the area to handle "with $35,000 in my pockets."

"I made it in row crops and lost it in wheat.

"I could have left here wealthy, but I'll be damned if I am going to walk out of here broke now."

Third Attempt In Stratosphere Is a Failure

Lafayette, Ind, April 15.—(AP)—Wiley Post, his third attempts to span the continent in record time by way of the stratosphere halted when his supercharged "Gut", today waited for refitting of his turbine propellers, uncertain of his future plans.

"I thought the third time would be a charm," the chunky Oklahoman grunted, crawling out of the cockpit of the oxygen suit, which permits him to fly in rarefied atmosphere.

Post said he "had a tailwind from Burbank to the Continental Divide," didn't see the ground from Denver until the landed here, and "was up over 38,000 feet at one time."

When the supercharger stripped a clutch, he added, "I flew blind for an hour and then dropped 22,000 feet through clouds to about 7,000 feet and cut the motor."

Trying to prove the feasibility of intercontinental trip in seven or eight hours, Post had hoped to complete the transflights across the continent above local weather disturbances. Post landing gear dropped to permit greater speed, skidded to a stop on the Purdue University Airport field here at 3.40 p.m., eight hours 12 1-2 minutes after Post lifted it into the air at Burbank, California.

The telephone Post informed a New York representative of Frank Phillips, Oklahoma oil man backing the flight, "the oxygen made me very pretty. It isn't a good idea to breathe oxygen with a cold."

PRICE SPREADS REPORT

The Price Spreads report with its recommendations is now a well-read report. It will make history.

It is one of the most striking documents of Canadian industrial history that could have been produced only in an era like the present.

Whether the report is adopted in full or not, it will have far-reaching effect. If it is adopted only in part, that part which is adopted will usher in important changes. If it is adopted in anything like its entirety it will bring vast transformations; at least that is its intention.

In the report is a sober warning that changes must come—changes according to the present measure or doubtless something more drastic in consequence of a failure to adopt measures.

In the words of the report, "We propose the first steps to the goal which has been well described as 'socialization of monopoly and civilization of competition.' Unless we can achieve this goal in the reasonably near future, other steps may well be forced upon us changes in our economic, social, and political organization besides which our proposals, important as we believe them to be, will pale into insignificance." Those may well be prophetic words. They are words which strike a keynote—those who advocate the report's adoption and those who can see other ways out.

The report recommends the forty-four hour week, tackles certain methods of business, recommends the creation of a federal trade and industrial board which will handle problems of industry and business, attacks unfair and secret rebates, would bring competition out into the open, warns against faulty capital structure in the milling industry and sees a need for much broader supervision of the state in the conduct of business. Low wages are attacked as they might be expected to be.

Some of these things, indeed most of them seem quite radical. They are bound to stir comment, they are certain to be strongly supported and also strongly attacked.

Whatever is done with the measure, Canadians have something to make them think on questions of the age, which has revealed problems which would have not come up under normal or near-normal conditions.

PASSION WEEK

Holy Week was ushered in when the annual observance of Palm Sunday was marked in the attention to Christendom. This was the prelude to Good Friday and the Easter festival of the Church and the opening of the last week in Lent.

The story of the Palm procession in the streets of ancient Jerusalem over nineteen centuries ago lives today as it has all through the intervening ages. On Sunday it was told again to millions of worshippers in the churches and the scholars in the Sunday Schools.

The story of Palm Sunday is a proper inauguration of Passion Week and of the Resurrection. It is a commentary on human life as it reveals the weaknesses of men who will flock to a leader and then desert him as quickly. So often and in more are these sidelights which throw into deeper shadow impending events. In the nature of the events of Passion Week, the triumphal entry into Jerusalem of the Master was necessary. It darkens the gloom just ahead and heightens the glory of the Easter Day. It prompted the acclaim of the street crowds and spurred evil-minded leaders of that day to take the step which led the Master to the cross.

LIFT FOR U. S. RAILWAYS

United States railways, in fairly desperate straits, have been conceded emergency freight rates for a period of 15 months. The new rates will not apply to major farm products.

Those good people in Canada who think that private management would end all our railway troubles, curiously overlook what is happening to United States railways under private management. A number of the bigger lines over there are on the verge of bankruptcy.

Our critics of public ownership overlook another matter. It is that by and large our Canadian railway rates are lower than American rates. Canadian freight rates, in truth, are about the lowest in the world.—Ottawa Citizen.

MONEY FLOWS INTO THE SEA

Twice a day the tidal waters of the Bay of Fundy rise and fall twenty-seven feet and affect the level of Passamaquoddy and Cobscook Bays. Impound the water after it has risen, let it flow through great hydraulic turbines, and at least 500,000 horse-power can be made available. The mere suggestion is enough to fire the imagination. Little wonder that Mr. Dexter Cooper, now on the PWA staff, has been urging the construction of the necessary Passamaquoddy works for over ten years, landismayed by an expenditure of $100,000,000. Now comes the news that $30,000,000 has been tentatively allotted by Public Works officials and that the first step toward realizing Mr. Cooper's dream will be taken now that the President has signed the Works Relief Bill. Pertinacity has prevailed over the best technical and economic opinion.

Few power schemes have been the subject of more controversy than this. Both the Canadian Commission and a PWA board of review voiced their disapproval for various reasons, of which the chief are the absence of a market for electricity and the high cost of a tidal power compared with that which can be obtained from undeveloped rivers in Maine or from steam plants on the New England seaboard. Mr. Cooper retorts by optimistic cost estimates of his own, and by proposing the erection of aluminum and stainless steel plants which are to consume 68 per cent of the power developed and to supply 70 per cent of the gross revenues for the first ten years. Engineers point out that the prospects of such metallurgical experiments are none too good, and that Eastport, Me., where the plants are to be built, is unfavorably located. Moreover, the herring and pollock fisheries have always been the first that their catch, valued at about $1,000,000 a year, is sure to be ruined, and support their contentions by the opinions of oceanographers.—New York Times.

SCHOOL VISION TESTS

When doctors disagree, the layman who ventures to intrude is likely to draw upon his temerous head a stream of polysyllabic phrases, derived from the Latin and the Greek. Greatly daring, therefore, if not reckless, we might proffer a word into the dispute about school vision tests. The real issue, it seems to us, is, What is or is not practicable?

Nurses, large human, and school children being what they are, it is not astonishing that some cunning youngsters should trick the examiner by such devices as memorizing the placard. How many succeed in baffling the nurse is not stated. Mr. A. H. Tweedie says "many"; Dr. J. Edgar Davey, "not many." It turns upon what is meant by the word "many."

At any rate, it is "some" who thus postpone the wearing of glasses, and the problem is the assistant medical health officer is to catch them in the act. Tweedie suggests the employment of specialists or the purchase of a stereoscopic machine, at $30 and $40 apiece, for each nurse. The solutions offered appear to be ideal ones, but unfortunately they involve the expenditure of money, and where is the department of health or the Board of Education to obtain the funds? Every one knows what the city's financial position is. Until things improve we are afraid Mr. Tweedie's counsels of perfection do not come within the range of practice.—Hamilton Spectator.

SWEEPSTAKES

As for sweepstakes, it is debatable whether their big prizes often remain long in the hands of their winners. There is generally supposed to be a host of very alert people, not impelled altogether by sympathy with more distribution, who are keen to obtain a slice of the price and who very frequently succeed. People are told and done, are just a gamble with very long odds against any one ticket. Nevertheless, the wrong, human nature loves a gamble, and if the income tax were so arranged that by adding a small percentage some lucky taxpayers would stand a chance to win a few hundred thousand dollars—which would, of course, be taxable next year—there might be considerably less reluctance to fill out those forms, that incidentally are almost due, for personal income.—Saint John Telegraph-Journal.

UTTERLY CALLOUS

It has been discovered in the jail of the District of Columbia, when a condemned man is sent to the electric chair, that the chair is set up in the end of the dining hall in which the prisoners take their meals. The jail superintendent made no mystery of the matter when asked but simply said: "We move the electric chair in shortly after 9, conduct the execution, remove the chair, and know scarcely anything to equal such a thing as this. The prisoners in confinement must eat their breakfast in the same room in which an execution had just taken place a few minutes before, just leaving enough time between to carry in the dishes."—Halifax Chronicle.

Profligacy, joined to ridicule, forms the most abominable and most dangerous of all characters.—Chesterfield.

"CALLER HERRING"

Next season's herrings, we read, are expected to be longer and heavier than those caught last year, remarks an English newspaper, which thus receives an inspiration to break into verse, as follows:

As one who was inclined to be a gloater
Over the tidings that a little time
Would see the advent of the bigger bloater
More grand of girth, more succulently prime,
Not quite convinced, yet longing for conviction,
I asked myself, "What reasoning, what thought
Enables them to make this sure prediction
About the great uncaught?"

Has Science (thus I mused) found means to hearten
Dame Nature till her secrets stand revealed
And learned that kippers do a daily dozen
Designed to make them of a bigger build?
That was my first idea, but a season
Of calm reflection showed that view untrue.
This prophecy is based upon a reason
Distinctly less profound.

Reflection brought a simpler explanation
And made the grounds of their assertion clear,
When I recalled the picturesque narration
Of angling friends whom I am doomed to hear.
To one who's heard them, each his rival
With tales of monsters missed, 'tis clear as day
Our fleet of frawlers will 'ere long be smiting
The ones that got away.

MR. TUTT, of Tutt & Tutt, Barristers, Solicitors, etc., is a great fisherman, according to the Saturday Evening Post, which tells of Mr. Tutt's piscatorial experiences on a very entertaining way. Mr. Tutt finds Canadian fishing best and stops not at any expense to get what he calls good fishing. Whether Mr. Tutt has discovered Canadian fishing as yet has not been revealed, but this county has long been renowned for its superior fishing opportunities, for the size and quality of the fish and their grand fighting abilities so dear to every real fisherman's heart. In view of the movement on foot to bring more fishermen tourists to this district those who know of fishing possibilities of the district, its past, present and probable future, offer a word of warning. Hastings fishing has been all that could be desired but in most of the lakes it is not as good as it was or should be. Restocking is the key word to continued good fishing in this district, systematic restocking with a view to the fishing of the future, next year, and the years which follow. The Bay of Quinte district is a veritable fisherman's paradise, salmon, bass, muscellunge, etc., and this fishing is so valuable to the district that it should be more adequately protected. Restocking is essential, and better means of law enforcement. Game wardens have been withdrawn and enforcement of the game and fish laws relegated to police. Game wardens are needed, who will enforce the law without fear or favor, not sensitive to political influence, men who are sports enough at heart to put their whole souls into their duties. Poaching is too prevalent and it is said that fish are openly peddled out of season. It is to the interest of every citizen of this district to obey the fish and game laws and to see that others do, even to the point of constituting oneself a policeman. Signs of awakening to the importance of protecting the fishing possibilities of this district are evident in the forming of an organization to promote publicity and attract tourists, angler's association, etc.

A GOOD BOOK NEED NOT BE SERIOUS BOOK

State of Mind Determines Variety of Reading Required

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Ph. D
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

Copyrwrite 1935
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

The term "good book" is used a great deal but what, exactly does it mean What constitutes a good book?

Nowadays we are literally swamped with all sorts of books, fiction and non-fiction, which are composed of the frothiest and most ephemeral stuff.

They have no body, no depth. They make no pretense of being penetrating character analysis; they are not the slightest bit true to life. Usually they possess a palatability upon unusual or bizarre situations, upon melodramatic plot upon mystery, cleverness, scandal and sex.

Now, you might think, cannot rightly be classified among the good books. Don't think that, I think, they rouse the emotions; only in the most superficial way, they don't stick in the memory. One gets out of them very little beside diversion or amusement and after finishing one of its kind, one often feels like throwing it away in disgust.

But this does not mean that a good book must necessarily be a serious one, one that makes you think, or one that continues to stimulate the mind after having completed the last page.

The average good book, one might say, is the one which affords you a certain amount of stimulating recreation, and one perhaps, which gives knowledge and comfort. Indeed, it would be better to designate such a book as a "standard".

For, when all is said and done, this "good-ness" one might say, of a book depends very largely upon the point of view which the book is approached.

If you are tired and have the blues, if you are feeling a mental strain upon you is not really a time to read a book at all. Rest when you are your normal self; it may be for then you may get the most out of the enjoyment out of a book that is philosophical or profound. Books are the friends of all of life's moods, subtle problems.

Don't be afraid to read the cheapest kind of fiction may be good for you when you are out of sorts. It is not what you read, as long as the stuff pulls you out of the blues, that is important and helps to revitalize you?

Don't be afraid to admit that a book is a good book which, at the moment, you find interesting and absorbing. It may happen to be a classic. It may be a best seller of the past. It may be an old long-forgotten and truthy romance what of does it matter?

One day one kind of a book is the best book for you, on another day it is something else. You may feel the reading biography or history tremendously and, on the morrow, poetry or an adventure story may appeal.

But familiarize yourself with various kinds of books so that you may have a choice. Remember to try to find what you seek and need. The best books are those that can be read over and over again, that can truly survive from generation to generation, that can be read at all times of their style or subject matter.

They become great because they fill the needs of souls in the world. The world life of average people and frequently and more surely than the classics.

Don't be snobbish about books and don't be ashamed of what you read. Read what interests you and will be most likely to make a mistake. Don't choose it for the good upon books that have always been considered good.

But don't force yourself to read any kind of book simply because someone else says it is a good book. If you start it, and it is not good for you, put it down. I have outlived above, drop it.

Don't read a book for you just because you heard to another's recommendation. So long as you become a confirmed book worm it will develop sooner or later, a taste and discrimination for the best. Some of the good books that will astonish even you.

Hiram's Early Dad Died

The proper diet for the feed a person who is recovering from a serious illness is a matter of much concern. Variety is essential, as well as nourishment in serving. Among the foods that should be allowed are milk, toast with butter, broths, the yolk of an egg, eggs, chicken soufflé and cocoa. Meats, fish and vegetables should be added well borne by the early stages of convalescence. These should be added gradually.

On Friday night last a man in infantry uniform arrived in Brockville by the train from the north and went to the St. Lawrence Hall. He is the one who deserted from the Williamsburg battalion a few days ago by jumping through a car window while the train was running at a high rate of speed. He said that after leaving the train he transfered back to the next station, and as he was without money a number of people subscribed enough money to send him to Brockville. While in Brockville he went to a doctor and had the cuts in his hand dressed. He looked pretty well fagged out. He would say nothing as to the motive for deserting. He left for Kingston by the night train.

Fire was discovered in the brick residence of Mr. Wm. Greene on Pope street, West Belleville, about 2.30 a.m. on Sunday. The building was totally destroyed. Prof. Greene lost the most of his furniture and carried no insurance.

SIMS-CULBERTSON BRIDGE GAME OVER

Victory Goes to The Culbersons by 16,130 Points

New York, April 13—(AP)—The Sims-Culbertson bridge match is ended, Victory goes to Ely and Josephine Culbertson by 16,130 points.

That was their final margin over Mr. and Mrs. P. Hal Sims at the end of the 150th number of the match, that Culbertson called the "Bridge battle of the century."

The match was supposed to demonstrate the superiority of either the Sims or the Culbertson system, in which each of two married couples husbands and their wives sat through more than 100 hours of bridge without an argument — which possibly may set a new record.

So far as the superiority of the Culbertson system is concerned, Hal Sims is not ready to concede it.

Sims insisted his cards generally were poor in spite of the fact the count of aces, kings and queens showed the Simses had the best of it.

The honor count for the match gave the Simses 1,761 points, the Culbertsons 1,729 aces; 1,715 kings and 1,393 queens.

Culbertson laid his success entirely to the effectiveness of his system.

During the three weeks duration of the battle, the two families played 870 hands during which the Culbertsons rolled up 197,279 points and the Simses 111,140. The Culbertsons led in rubbers 82 to 68.

"TOOK ALL KINDS OF PILLS, THEN CEREAL BROUGHT RELIEF"

Constipation, Due to Insufficient "Bulk," Relieved by Kellogg's ALL-BRAN

A fine letter from Mrs. Snyder: "I have had trouble with my bowels for years, taking all kinds of pills and drugs, with no relief.

"Then I saw Kellogg's ALL-BRAN and bought a package. I have good movements every day, I am 73 years old, I am telling my friends what bran has done for me."—Mrs. Sallie Snyder. Address upon request.

Constipation due to insufficient "bulk" is relieved by Kellogg's ALL-BRAN.*

Research shows that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN furnishes the "bulk" in the diet that relieves intestines. ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B as well as iron, an element of the blood.

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient for correct cases of constipation. With each meal, in serious cases. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN relieves digestion better than the "bulk" in leafy vegetables. How much better to use this food in place of patent medicines!

At all grocers in the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Keep on the Sunny Side of Life

WHEN King George ascended the throne, there were many who thought that he would be sent to the ardor of royal sports — the stables in particular.

King Edward had always been a lover of horse-racing, while King George had never shown much liking for it. But when he became King, he astonished everyone by his knowledge of horseflesh. He was a better judge than his father. Our picture to-day shows the King chatting informally at a race meeting where he is often seen, for any of the royal stable are racing.

But horse-racing is the King's favorite sport. There are two others that take priority, desire to gamble or win.

shooting and yachting. The King has an expert fisherman ready for shooting on his Scottish estates is a favorite pastime. Yachting is also a pastime of real attraction for His Majesty and there is nothing he likes more than to climb aboard the royal yacht Britannia for a sail in a sparkling breeze.

The King never had the luck with horses that his father King Edward had. Always some unforseen mishap marred what seemed to be a certain opportunity. But with luck of success never worried the King much. He liked sports for the sake of sport, not for the sake of winning.

So a horse-racing is the King's favorite sport. There are two others that take priority, desire to gamble or win.

Ald R. D. Arnott is Speaker at The Monthly Meeting

The Thurlow Conservative Club held its meeting in the Loyal Orange Hall at Canifton.

The President Mr. Peter Mitchell called the meeting to order and opened by singing the "Maple Leaf Forever".

After minutes of the last meeting were read and approved business transacted the following gentlemen were called to the platform: Richard Arnott, Dr. Kinnear, Geo. Stokes and Roscoe Robson.

Dr. Kinnear of Belleville congratulated the Township of Thurlow on its splendid organization and stated his pleasure in being present. He spoke of the disgraceful way in which the Hydro Government had repudiated the Hydro contracts, thereby saving the country considerable loss to bond holders and throwing men out of work at a time when it is the duty of every one but also hurting the credit of the Province of Ontario in Canada, Great Britain and the United States.

Richard Arnott, President of the Young Canada Club of Belleville, on being called to speak, thanked the Thurlow Conservatives for the invitation to be present and gave a splendid address on the political progress of organization work being carried on in the city and promised his presence at a meeting in Belleville would roll up a good majority for the Conservative candidate.

Mr. Arnott said, that the Hon. Mackenzie Bowman had taken the courage to put through but at the same time unpopular, the Sales Tax role of Canada to put them in to enforce those policies which they have had the courage to bring before the people, when they were in power, but failed to put them in a book.

He said how King had worked against the St. Lawrence Waterway Scheme, which had it gone through would have made work for a large number of men of this township.

He spoke of the high standard of efficiency of the Hepburn Government in the Department of Civil Service of experienced men and warned that this process would be changed should the power of Mackenzie King and his followers were returned to power.

In closing, he urged all present to do their utmost to elect the Conservative candidate and so help return a Conservative Government under the leadership of the Hon. R. B. Bennett.

Demand for Pure Bred Bulls Shows Industry on Upswing

Farmers Demanding That Hogs be Graded on Rails

Ottawa, April 15.—(CP)—The recent sales of pure bred bulls in Western Canada are being regarded as a definite barometer indicating an upward swing in the livestock industry. Reports reaching the Department of Agriculture from these sales receive every day, many of them held in Brandon, Regina, Calgary and Edmonton

In sales, and particularly in the Alberta sales, prices were paid than in former years. One bull in Calgary brought a top price of $1,500, according to information officials have received.

Improved demand for high grade live cattle in the United States is responsible for the demand for pure bred bulls, according to Senator D. E. Riley, a rancher himself. He regarded favorably many recommendations of the Price Spread Commission for helping the industry.

Beef for Fertilizer

The proposal very poor beef be taken off the market and converted into tankage or fertilizer, the Senator thought would help considerably. It would reduce the supply of beef offered to that extent. Further this poor beef often discouraged people from buying beef at all.

A wide demand for grading beef on the rail is sweeping Canada, according to applications received by the Department of Agriculture.

Grading on the rail means grading after the animal has been dressed. This is the practice in Denmark. The practice in Canada has been to grade on the hoof, which was more feasible at first, though admittedly less accurate.

Last year a start was made in grading on the rail in some parts of Ontario and at the outset the producer was given the option of grading on hoof or on rail. One abattoir, where the two systems were in use was at his request. Reports reaching the Department show that grading is much more popular and the demands it be required by all packing plants are coming in so rapidly it is impossible to fill them all.

ALBERT SCHOLARSHIP WILL BE AVAILABLE

Novel Means Taken Give Young People a Chance

The Albert College scholarship project, that the executive of the Bay of Quinte Young People's Conference discussed a few weeks ago was unfolded at a special meeting at the Albert College the other evening, when the Young People's Society of Bridge Street Church were the guests of the Albert College student body.

The executive of the Bay of Quinte Conference thought that many students would be glad to go to college but due to lack of finances they are unable to attend. It was decided that each Young People's Society have an educational night once a year. Special speakers would be invited to speak. This meeting would be of great educational value to the societies. A small fee would be charged to each member. This money would go toward two $150 scholarships, for the Albert College and the Wesley Ladies' College. These two colleges coming under the Bay of Quinte Conference are progress of the United Church of Canada.

Each society has the privilege of selecting whom they deem worthy of the scholarship. The scholarships will be donated from among the societies who attain the highest standing.

What Brings About Tantrum in Child?

By LISA GRENELLE

Janie has a tantrum every time her mother leaves the house. Alice whenever there is company. Edward at bedtime, and John whenever he is crossed.

Only spoiled children have tantrums according to the common supposition.

A spoiled child generally is described as a child overindulged, never disciplined and permitted at all times to have his own way.

Certainly a child brought up in such wise is a spoiled child. But there is more than one way of being of spoiling a child. Many a child appears to be spoiled when he is not. In reverse, the most spoiled child in the world does not always show it in the casual observer, nor need he go in for tantrums.

A tantrum is not always an indication that a child is spoiled. It may be indicative of rebellion, resentment or revenge. It is an effort on the child's part either to attract attention or to force a person to give him what he wants. It is his way of drawing your attention to the fact that he considers himself unjustly treated, neglected or overdominated. And the child may be right.

Don't Encourage Them.

However, tantrums should in no way be encouraged. Care should be taken that a child gains nothing by a tantrum. I do not approve of a spanking in any case. Physical chastisement of any kind acts as a stimulant to the nerves rather than a depressant. And whatever effect it has on the immediate expression of the trouble, it in no way removes the cause.

A child slagging a tantrum should not be hit, scolded or reprimanded. He should be ignored, and removed, if necessary, by force to his own room and there incarcerated.

This manner of punishment is always harmless and often effective, no matter what the cause of the tantrum. If the tantrum was motivated by overstimulation, for instance, solitude and quiet are bound to react favorably on the child's nerves. If, on the other hand, the tantrum was caused by a desire for attention, it will teach the child that such a scene is not a sound way of obtaining it.

Tantrum Is Danger Signal

But although incarceration is the soundest way of handling the crisis, it does not always remove the cause.

Like a fever, a tantrum is a danger signal. What is wrong with the child? Why does he crave so much attention? Has he been neglected? Children do nothing without cause. They are not naturally bad or good or even spoiled. But they frequently become maladjusted, indicating their difficulties, like little animals, by kicks and screams. It is more important to find and discover the cause for the rebellion than to stop that particular childish form of expressing resentment.

OATMEAL COOKIES

3-4 cup shortening
1 cup white sugar
2 cups flour
1-2 teaspoon salt
1-2 teaspoon baking soda
2 teaspoons baking powder
1-2 cup sour milk
2 cups quick cooker oats

Cream shortening thoroughly, blend sugar gradually. Sift flour, measure and re-sift with salt, soda and baking powder. Add sour milk and oats alternately to the butter and sugar mixture, then gradually stir in the sifted dry ingredients to make a soft dough. Chill until very firm. (This will require about 12 hours.) Roll to 1-4 inch thickness, using a lightly floured board, cut out with floured cutter, and bake in a moderate oven, 350F until lightly browned. (10 to 15 minutes.)

Entertaining In New Community

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. We moved near this little town about a year ago, and some of the people of the best society have called on us, and a few have invited us to parties. There are several of the ladies I have met at different parties whom I like very much, and I would like to have them in my home, although some of these have not called on me, nor invited me to their parties. Is it my place to have some kind of party and invite them first? I want them to know I'd be glad to be sociable, though I do not want to force myself on them. At the same time I want to do my part in making my place in the social life of the town.

2. When I have guests from other towns, in what way could I let them know my neighboring friends? We have a large roomy country home, just a half mile from town—a lovely place to entertain friends, although as I've said, I want to go about it in the proper way.

D.

1. You have an excellent basis and excellent opportunities to begin to take your place as a hostess in the social life of your community. To begin with, you have the great advantage of having a charming home in which to entertain. And then you have the wish to be a gracious hostess in all things properly and delightfully. A grand beginning.

Begin your entertaining plans simply and with good social judgment. Be especially careful about your guest lists. You apparently have a generous number of guests with whom to begin your invitations. Invite first the persons who have called on you and the ones who have invited you to their parties. (I hope that, in the meantime, you have punctiliously returned the calls of the hospitable women who have called on you. These return calls are very important in establishing yourself (or you in a new community.)

I suggest that first you have a tea-

Like to Eat? Then Watch The Diet

Eliza Landi

BY HELEN FOLLETT

Do you like to eat? Do you get excited when savory odors come wafting from the kitchen? Do you lap up the good things of the table? Then that's elegant, for your hair tonic bills will be practically nil. You'll have a few wrinkle fighter until you are ninety, if then. And the chances are you will always have a good disposition.

Every cell of the body is dependent upon food. Every hair on your head is dependent upon the rations. Nobody knows how much in the way of beautifiers the grocer's boy brings in, but to a balanced diet and much good will come from it, including the svelte, slender shape, the clear complexion and bright eyes.

Gals who nibble between meals, eat little or nothing at the table, get premature wrinkles, crinkled necks and sulking ways. There's no beauty without health, no health without proper nourishment.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

He Played the Accordian

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I met him at a Christmas party held by my mother's lodge. He was playing an accordion so the people could dance. I asked him to play my favorite song. He said he didn't know it, but would play other song for me. He played for me, and then we had quite a talk together.

Before we said goodbye, he gave his name, address and telephone number, and asked me to call him. Would it be all right if I called him up some time

Sadie

By all means. Invite the young man to call. Nothing could be more conventional than meeting him through your mother's lodge.

A Love That Has Lasted

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Since I was thirteen, I've been in love with a certain man, and I still am now, at 1 enty-six. I used to run into once in a while; then I didn't see him for three years. A year ago we met unexpectedly and I was so happy. The last time we were out together, we passed by a certain car and he said it belonged to his girl. Later he denied she was his "steady."

Before he left me he asked me if I would see him again, and I told him "yes," if he didn't have a "steady" girl. He said not to worry about that, but he hasn't come to see me now for five months. I am beginning to lose hope.

Lonesome

There's no question about the genuineness of a love which has lasted all these years, and it's too bad if your friend does not realize what he is missing. From the text of your letter I imagine you may be too sensitive, too inclined to question instead of taking his interest in you for granted.

A Question of Love or Friendship

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been going with a boy friend for almost a year, and this is my problem: From the first I could dance, I was with this same friends, but he has grown deeply in love with me. I enjoy his company, but think we could be only friends. He is heart-broken.

I have considered marrying him to make him happy. Would such a marriage be successful. It has been a wonderful friendship, and I wish it could continue, but it seems impossible to keep it just a friendship. Can you advise me?

XYX

There is no better background for marriage than tried and true friendship. At the same time, if your feeling for this young man persistently remains as friendship, and after a year has not developed into anything warmer, it would seem to be a mistake to marry him at present. You don't you agree upon a voluntary separation So many girls never realize how much they really care for a young man till he stops coming to see them and they miss his devotion.

Weddings

HALES—CHAPLIN

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the Baptist Parsonage on Sunday evening, when Bernice Chaplin, eldest daughter of Albert E. and Mrs. Chaplin, became the bride of Osborne Hales, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hales, all of Belleville. Rev. A. G. Sinclair officiated.

After the ceremony the young couple left on a post-nuptial tour, and upon their return they will reside in this city.

How a Pale, Run-down Girl Became Positively PRETTY
In a Canadian city a certain girl consulted an authority who examined her, weighed her and tested a sample of her blood. The test showed the haemoglobin in her blood was only 68% instead of the normal 90% to 95% for a woman. Her weight was 91½ pounds. With her blood testing only 68% haemoglobin, it was only natural for this young woman to be pale and colorless, and lacking in pep and energy, because haemoglobin is not only the coloring material in the blood, if it is also the precious element that carries the vitalizing, energizing oxygen from the lungs to every organ and tissue of the body.
What Her Advisor Told Her To Do
The authority instructed the girl to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (called pink because they have a pink sugar coating) three times a day for a month and then go for another blood test. He knew the formula for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and recognized their value and safety.
One month later this patient's blood had been so greatly enriched that the haemoglobin had increased 20%. Her weight had increased to 100½ pounds —a nine-pound gain. In the words of her advisor, "She had a lot more color, her face had rounded out and she was positively pretty". Her complexion had the glow caused by rich, red, healthy blood. She was revitalized and endowed with new stores of vigor and energy, and appeared as a more attractive as the girl whose photo is shown above.
Try This Beauty and Health Treatment Yourself
If your face is thin and haggard, your complexion pale, sallow and old-looking, your body underweight, your digestion poor, your nerves bad, your blood thin, your energy below par, take the tried and proven blood-builder, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Try a course of this famous tonic and blood-builder of health and vigor. Your druggist has it—50c a package.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE

"Flirtation Walk"
Scores Big Triumph at the Belle

There was tears very close to the laughter that it evoked; there was a pulse thrilling nerve tingling quality to its thrilling scenes and gorgeous spectacles; it had a plot that rivalled those of serious dramas, and never has a happier combination of youth, talent, music, suspense and beauty been brought to the screen than in this, Warner Bros. masterpiece, "Flirtation Walk", the first military musical ever filmed.

The audience that thrills filled the Belle Theatre at the premiere of this greater and better musical last Saturday, did not hesitate to show its appreciation, even though Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler and Pat O'Brien could not be here in spirit-plause.

Keeler and Powell are perhaps the country's most popular screen lovers. Their work in this picture will greatly increase that popularity. Both show real dramatic ability. Pat O'Brien always a man's actor, is better even than he was in "20 Million Sweethearts" or "Here Comes the Navy".

There are two spectacular dance numbers that will make their director Bobby Connolly famous. One is the first screen reproduction of an Hawaiian Luau, or, "Pearl of Love". in which scores of native Hawaiian dancers and musicians participate. The other was filmed at West Point's historic "Flirtation Walk" in which additional scores of the most beautiful girls in Hollywood are seen.

Another enchanting West Point spectacle presents the traditional "Hundredth Night Play" of the Academy, and the June graduation ceremonies are worked into the plot as well as scenes on the parade grounds, the famous pageantry and the stirring "Flirtation Walk", from which the picture takes its title, and the Rising Clock where no maiden dare deny her lover.

Ruby Keeler never was never more sweet and winsome than as the general's daughter in love with Private Dick, who later becomes a cadet, but whose romance is beset by many tempestuous storms. The simplicity and genuineness of her work gives her characterization a sincerity that few actresses could hope to equal.

Pat O'Brien is excellent as the hard-boiled, scrapping top sergeant who disciplines the men with a rough hand and loves them with a warm Irish heart.

An entertaining program of varied short treats precede the feature attraction.

"Flirtation Walk," altogether, is the last word in screen entertainment, a picture no one should miss. The exciting scenes will be repeated again Tonight and Tuesday, matinee and evening.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Rabbitt"
With Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon in Leading Roles

Few authors live to see the name of one of their characters become so definitely a part of national thought as to be added to the language of the country.

Probably no novel of modern times ever achieved the same popularity as "Rabbitt".

There are perhaps fewer people in America who have not read "Rabbitt" than who have not read a life of Shakespeare.

The book, which has been made into a film of the same title, and which is the current screen offering at the Capitol Theatre, is an astounding cross-section of life in a small city.

Its characters are typical to an extent that reduces them to definite photographs of ourselves and our neighbors.

With almost cruel detachment, Lewis has thrust his lancet into the vanities and hypocrocies of smug small townets.

The greatest interest centers in Rabbitt, himself, which will be played by Guy Kibbee.

He is a good hearted, well intentioned citizen. He sees himself as a leader,though he invariably follows the pack. With no culture and no American Way he substitutes high sounding phrases for considered ideas.

Without knowing it, he is a poseur, with nothing back of his heroic positure except a mediocre brilliance.

His wife, played by Aline MacMahon, sees through him, but loves him with a deep, maternal protectiveness. His children are far ahead of him in knowledge of the world.

When drama comes into his self-centered life, it finds him unprepared and the result is a forceful and moving human story.

Claire Dodd has the role of a small town vamp. Glen Boles, whose first screen role was in "Prisoner of Shark Island", as the son and Maxine Doyle, who was in "Dr. Bruner's leading lady in "Six Day Bike Rider," enacts the daughter. Nan Grey, the new discovery from Monogram, is announced as the sweetheart of the younger Rabbitt.

Added Attractions

"Back To The Soil," a side splitting comedy, together with hilarious and inimitable team, Charlie Chase and Harry Gribbon, "Buddy The Dentist", A clever Looney-Tune Cartoon and "Pathe Sportlights," an unusual reel featuring lovely Jesse Matthews in gowns created by Hollywood's leading new silk fabric. DuBarry soup Tuesday and Tuesday.

Complete shows 2.30: 7.15: 9.15.

ARE HOSTS AT ENJOYABLE PARTY

Carrying Place—Navigation for the season opened officially on Saturday and this week will bridge tenders on the Murray Canal remove the protective coverings and the light at Presqu'le Point began sending out its warning beams. According to a report by S. G. Cadwell or the S. S. Bessie Butler may be first vessel to pass through the Canal this year; but as the Cadwell at present is plying the waters of Lake Ontario, it will be a little possibility that she will make a trip here for some little time at least. It is rather pleasant to see the gleam of the Point light once again after the long winter season. Residents have seen no sign of the government tender, Arrowhead so far, though it may be along a little later. The Cadwell, often a visitor to local ports, was first vessel to visit the port of Toronto this season, and her skipper won the harbourmaster's silk hat awarded the captain of the first vessel of the year.

Mr. and Mrs. John Davis made a trip to Toronto on Wednesday last.

A jolly "sugaring-off" party was held at the historic old Young homestead, Consecon, on Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Young and family, on Thursday evening last. An enthusiastic crowd of young people gathered in the large basement of her house where a huge old fire-place provided heat for boiling. Until a late hour the guests revelled in the delicacy and departed with the firm conviction that Mr. and Mrs. Young were really very lovely good fellows indeed.

The services on the store and post office came down on Friday and on the same day an electric refrigerating unit was added to the equipment of the store to boost the sale of ice cream during the coming summer.

March first for several directions have been lighting the sky at night and sending trails of brown smoke across the sky.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Gould and children, Erma and Ernest, moved to Trenton late last week after having spent the autumn and winter with Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Weese.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Baker were Friday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Hennessey and family.

A movement to organize and organize a golf club locally will probably go forward very soon;

"DEMOSTHENES" HURL RHETORIC AT EMPTY BENCHES

According to the dictionary, a filibuster is one who wages unauthorized warfare against a foreign state; one who delays legislation. That is what the conservative opposition in the Ontario legislature did for 27 hours without cease over the government's Hydro bill. In fact they went at it so long that the government demanded that the sitting stand still in order that Monday could remain Monday all day Tuesday so that Monday's business could be discussed on Tuesday.

When the opposition got crossed in their signals, the government seized the opportunity and put an end to the debate for the moment, the bill going into second reading and committee. These candid camera shots taken in the legislature show below Col. Wm. H. Price, former Attorney-General, reading a speech to empty chairs. Beside him sits Opposition Leader, Geo. S. Henry Behind and to the RIGHT sits Farquhar Oliver, U.F.A., while at back is W. A. Dickson. At clerk's table in front is Major Alec Lewis, clerk of House (LEFT) and Chas. Bulmer assistant clerk. The photo below shows the man who had the toughest job of the record-breaking session, Speaker N. O. Hipel. Seated on the dais is one of the page boys who were the only ones to benefit by the filibuster when Premier Hepburn decided that their sleep should be raised in view of the all-night sessions. Opposition benches can be seen plotting dire things for the government in background.

ANOTHER "ANTHONY EDEN" PEACE CONFERENCE

Such masters as the Polish corridor, and the effect of Germany's rearming on the peace of Europe, were discussed in the recent conference of Captain Anthony Eden, England's lord privy seal and roving ambassador, and Joseph Beck, minister of foreign affairs of Poland(l) and Gens (Prof.) Ignats Mosciski, and Captain Anthony Eden.

ace is pictured and shows (LEFT) Jack Chiefett as teacher, is to have a visitor for a week after Easter shortly when a student from Peterborough Normal School is sent out to gain practice teaching. Both of the workings and problems of the average rural school. The local school being graded with two rooms, will not have any such visitors, as the school inspector points out that these teachers-in-training are being sent only to single-room schools.

Reports to the effect that a local truck owner was fined recently in Trenton for defective brakes has sent a number of car-owners to garages for adjusting and relining of the brakes of their own vehicles.

Mrs. M. Gannon after a rather severe illness is somewhat recovered.

Mr. J. M. Hanthorn has purchased a new horse.

"JACK POT" FROM SLOT MACHINE PAID IN CASH

"Well, this man traded them for cash four dollars and he later replayed the remaining four dollars. Later I put seven five cent pieces into the machine, but did not get any slugs out," concluded Mr. Grey.

Upon cross examination by Mr. Payne witness admitted that Mr. Marsakas was not present when the slugs were released, the inducement it was his son, who paid out the cash for the slugs. He also admitted he did not know, how many of the deemed slugs were kept.

Bernard Bennett, Point Anne County Constable, was the next witness called, Mr. Bennett told of his request to investigate the local slot machine question. He was in Marsakas' and played the slot machine on March 29th and 30th, he said.

"What happened?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"I got no results on the 29th but the following day, however, I got 20 slugs out of the machine and I had deposited two five cent pieces," stated the witness.

"What did you do with them?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"I cashed them in to Mr. Marsakas for one dollar", stated witness as he indicated the entrance to the room, who redeemed the slugs won by witness.

"Did you see anything else?" asked the Crown.

"Yes, I saw young boys, who play, ed the machines and some of them I saw cashing slugs," stated witness.

Objection

Upon cross examination, however, considerable evidence was given in reference as to the identification of the machine. Witness established that there were various kinds of machines in operation and licenced. Witness admitted that he could not identify the machine presented as being the machine he played. He stated it looked something like it.

Chief Kidd was the next witness called and told of issuing the search warrants, after they had been signed by the Magistrate. # THE LOVE FLIGHT

by Jeanne Dixon

INSTALMENT ONE

Anne Austin drew back into the shadows. She had meant to stop a bit farther on where moon-silver sifting through the trees would provide just the right light for the flattering of her white gown. Anne had studied effects long enough to make the most of whatever nature and the art provide.

Nature, lavish with pines and silver birch, provided an unbelievably lovely setting for the boat-house perched high on a bluff overlooking a mountain lake. Anne had taken care of the art, and the artifice too. It was her purpose to constitute herself the most brilliant, the most desirable jewel in the setting. Accomplishment was within her grasp. Craig Braden's hand had closed over hers on the balcony rail. He was leaning so close that he caught the scent of her hair and Anne knew a thrill of the danger to men of such precision. If Craig Braden proposed to-night, or within the next two days, when the house party would break into its component parts and go rolling away in search of other exciting settings, while Anne Austin, would be the crown jewel of the season. She would glitter on society pages. She would sparkle in those extensive and elusive beauties where society congeals. She would be the envy of the girls in her set, the despair of their mothers.

Craig Braden was better than a catch. He was a positive treasure-trove of everything the reckless restless thrill-chasing young women of Mayfair most of all its more democratic neighbor, Broadway, disdained.

Money. Position. Power.

Have was the triumvirate which brought the bright butterflies of frivolity and of fashion to flutter their wings at the end of the tired eyes of the bored young man whose boast was that he had seen everything and done most of it.

During and immediately following his college days, a surprising number of butterflies, varying all the way from the modest gray moth to the gorgeous purple aristocrat that lives its life in night-gardens had captured the fancy of Craig Braden. None had entangled his heart. It was common report that none had so much as brushed his heart with the tips of its wings.

Then—along came Anne. She was rather moth-like at the time, her unruffled composure having been subdued a few months earlier by one of those unforeseen accidents which followed the quake and the razing of the houses of Midas in Wall Street.

Edward Chalfont Austin, Anne's father, had used a pistol to remove himself from a most embarrassing situation. Anne, left motherless now entirely orphaned, he left nothing more than a memory of the fortune they had lavished on living, a memory further tarnished by his fatal act, and in the face of failure.

The story given to the public was that Edward Chalfont Austin, banker and broker, examining his gun he kept for protection in his Wall Street offices, accidentally pressed the trigger with the result—a suicide. A few days later came news of the unexpected bankruptcy of the Austin finance.

"Poise," said the public. "Austin was ever a coward. He couldn't take it. He was wiped out, so he wiped himself out."

That part of the world in which the Austins had inhabited was terrified by the report it almost forgot to make its gestures of sympathy. Death and destruction! Everywhere. No exemptions. The seals of the mighty reckoning. That it was Austin. Who knew who it would be to-morrow, or the next day, or the next?

It was on one such occasion, a small week-end gathering at an estate in Westchester, that Anne became a definite entity in the consciousness of Craig Braden. They had met before, but the man's vision had been so distorted by the kleig lights of life or had been so blurred by indulgence that Anne had failed to register. This time his gaze was arrested by the girl in grey. Her voice reminded him of a cello, muted, with a sob in its strings. His gaze held until a flush mantled under the girl's cheeks. Her eyes were grey, cool and steady, did not waver. He liked her for that. Women he met started cooing when he showed them marked attention.

"I've seen you some place," Braden said, obviously puzzled either by the face itself or by its power to hold him.

"Perhaps," Anne said, and gave him the ghost of a smile. "I used to get about quite a lot."

Braden took possession of the pale girl's arm. Before that moment until her guests were saying their farewells, the hostess was busy detailing a maid to take "dear Craig" from the side of the moment she had not even considered. That Austin chit, of all people! The hostess had asked Anne only because at the last moment a really desirable girl sent regrets and she felt she ought do do something for Ned Austin's daughter. She had intended Craig for herself. Austin minx had practically chained him to her side. Well, there was an end, so far as she was concerned, to any foolish sentimentality about Ned Austin's daughter. Let the girl fend for herself. She seemed well able to do so.

Shortly after the week-end gathering in Westchester word was flashed along the grapevine system of social secretaries to the effect that in order to get Craig Braden one must first invite and secure the acceptance of Anne Austin. As Miss Austin was in partial mourning, only small and informal affairs could be considered. Amazing, the number of mothers with marriageable daughters who suddenly decided to confine their social activities to small and informal affairs.

Craig Braden did everything except inaugurate a Braden hour on the radio for the purpose of broadcasting to the world the fact that he considered Anne Austin the pick of the crop of girls he had met, or ever expected to meet.

"How does she do it?" women asked one another. "She's clever, of course, brains and all that, but Craig has affected to despise clever women. He knows that he likes them beautiful and dumb."

Opinion generally seemed to be that maybe Anne was not clever. Maybe she just pretended clever-ness. But even though she might be clever, she certainly was no fine beauty. Considerably above average, of course. Good glints in her light brown hair. And didn't she know how to make the most of any lurking glint, too, by combing her hair about her head in a kind of studied disarray!

Dark eyes with something of the oriental in them. An upward tilt to her nose, an upward curve to her lips. As to the curves of her figure even though they were delicate, still they were curves. The fashion was for girls in shorts to be mistaken for their brothers.

Now the summer season was drawing to a close. Already the frosty nights had begun to shake out the ruffles of their autumn finery. Dreamer veils of crystal glistened along the paths and on the roofs of Adirondack and Berkshire camps in the early morning.

A dozen, two dozen times during the last month, Craig Braden would have proposed to her. Anne knew, had she not been adroit enough to maneuver him into a position where a declaration of love seemed inopportune. Why did she postpone the moment which meant for her a return to the Austin days when money was something a teller drew out of a bottomless well and handed to her on demand? Last year now she had been a pensioner, living on the bounty of others, returnishing her wardrobe with this and that made shift to give it the air of being in the mode.

When she returned to town she would have less than three hundred dollars left of the pittance she had been able to salvage from the wreck of the Austin fortune. Three hundred dollars! She turned her head and looked at all but tousled those of the man bending close to her. She felt his hand over hers tighten its clasp. His arm was about her, drawing her close. His breath was hot on her cheek.

"Craig," she said faintly, raising her free hand to have and and blocking his closer grasp with her elbow. "I—I—my head's in a whirl. Get me a glass of wine, will you—or water—or ice, anything so it's cold. I think I'm going to draw a blank."

"Dearest, hold on—you'll be all right in a minute." Craig Braden picked her up bodily and deposited her in a deck chair farther back in the shadows. "I can't leave you this way. Let me call a maid to bring you a good stiff shot of brandy. That ought to brace you up."

"No, please," Anne pleaded. The man would be sure to make a fuss. All the others would come charging out. "I feel better already, but I do crave something cool. Get it for me, there's a lamb. Long and cool, in an iced glass."

"It's those infernal cocktails Brenda's been making up all evening," Braden growled. "Worse than shell shock. I'll run for a brandy and soda if you'll promise not to do a fade-out while I'm gone."

"Brandy and soda, with a big lump of ice," Anne said. "I'm almost normal now, or I will be as soon as you bring the ice. We'll put it in your kerchief and part it on top of my head. Please do, Craig, now, and step on it."

He obeyed, scudding across the verandah toward the old-fashioned bar that was the pride and joy of the host. At a speed no one who knew Craig Braden would have believed he would have, and pursued by all the furies or by Satan himself.

Anne waited until he had disappeared through the French doors. Instantly, then, she was on her feet, flitting through the darkness at the edge of the veranda. Down the steps of logs, hand hewn, along the path of pine needles to an oasis of light where a dozen cars were parked their drivers idling on a bench under the birches.

"Dennis!" Anne called toward the bench lowering her voice so that it would not carry back to the boathouse.

"Yes, Miss." A figure stepped out fro mthe birches and raised its hand to the visor of a cap.

Drive me to Glen Arden at once, please." Glen Arden was the summer palace the Beasleys called it during the quake. It was here Anne had come a week earlier, on a house party that Bruno Beasley boasted was to make house-party history. Bruno's heads, Anne found, was no idle one. Bruno had almost as much imagination as he had money and what he lacked by way of originality and daring Mrs. Bruno supplied. It had been a week of such mad flights, of such fantastic flurries that Anne was sure no one person would believe it could have happened. There were times when she could not believe it herself. But Craig Braden was never farther from her side than her hand could reach, save to protect her from the major insanities.

The wedding scene in "Flirtation Walk," co-starring Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, now at the Belle.

"Yes, Miss." The figure Anne addressed as Dennis walked toward a long lean car parked at the entrance to the circle.

"Keep the engine as quiet as you can, please, Dennis." Anne instructed, whisking through the car door while Dennis stood at attention. "I don't want the others to know I've gone. It might disturb the party. Get me to Glen Arden as quickly as you can. Then come back and explain to Mr. Braden that I felt ill and thought it better to get to the house at once."

"Very well, Miss."

The car slipped out of the circle and wound its way among the pines as noiselessly as a woods animal foraging. Five, ten, fifteen minutes and Anne sauntered across the terrace of Glen Arden, careful not to attract the attention of any guests who might be loitering, fled up the broad stairs to her room; closed the door behind her, turned the key, and collapsed on a chaise longue.

"Why did I do it?" she cried, stiffing her face against the silk cushions. "Why did I run from him? If he had kissed me I'd have screamed, or beat my flats against his chest, or dug my nails into his cheeks—along the lines where they say—oh, why can't I be reasonable! Why can't I take him? The others would, any one of them. They'd take him and grovel for the chance to get at him. He'll never come back. Never. He'll know the faint was a fake. He'll be furious. The others will take their lead from him. I'll be dropped completely and they'll be cruel about it, too. It's finished, unless—"

Wash there some way she might explain her flight to Craig? Tell him she felt queer after he had told her men had cleared she was in her room at Glen Arden. That she would do. It was easy to accept what one wanted to believe. Craig would be a willing victim for her white lie. She'd write a note now and dispatch it to the boathouse. He'd come to her.

"So what?" Anne, asking, starting at herself wide-eyed and disheveled in a mirror. "He'll be—mad in his own line like on mine—NO!" Abruptly she rose. Flung her arms before her as though she were warding off horror. She was laughing hysterically. "I can't take the shot. A fool and a pauper."

She steadied herself before the mirror, addressing the white-faced, feverish woman who confronted her.

"There are only two things you can do," she told the woman. "You can be a reasonably human being and marry Craig Braden, or you can be a silly little fool and go to bed."

The white-faced woman gazed back at Anne with steady unwinking eyes.

"WORK!" she said.

Anne Austin pulled her hat to a more jaunty angle and slipped her hands into a pair of white gloves. Where would lunch? Where was she to get the bills less than half of the three hundred dollars retrieved from the wreck of her fortune would remain? This hotel—she must find something less expensive.

Where did one lunch, outside the boathouse? Maida's crack? She hadn't the remotest idea.

"The Colony," she said aloud. "Just the place. I'll lunch there and meet some one." She was very definitely hungry for her very own kind. She was at the door of her room when the telephone tinkled a recall. "Craig," she breathed, her heart in a panic. "Perhaps it's for me, Anne, even now!" Her voice in answer was vibrant with hope. "Hello, Anne. Wherever have you been?" Maida Sugdam. Why did blood corpuscles assume the right to be querulous at demanding? Anne's and Maida's mothers were sisters, but the daughters could have been born on antipodal spheres in wildly separated ages.

"I've been to Glen Arden. Try Bruno Beasleys house party." Anne answered shortly.

"But that's a week ago. Did you stop on?"

"No."

"You might ring us."

"I've been terribly busy. Some lay cards of father's affairs."

Anne could hear Maida's collecting herself for a plunge. Something explosive, of course. Maida never looked one up otherwise.

"What's this I hear about you and Craig Braden?"

"I'll gamble," Anne said, affecting indifference. "What do you hear?"

"That he's let you down. Everybody knows. Even the newspapers are commenting."

"How flattering! I didn't know I was important enough to rate a press notice."

"See here, Anne, don't be flippant." When Maida was annoyed Anne didn't know whether to laugh at her or to rage.

"Craig Braden was completely gone on you. If you've let him slim from under your fingers—but of course you wouldn't do anything so stupid."

Maida was waiting for an answer for assurance that her trust in family astuteness was well founded. Anne thought it best to be cautious and find out she knows. She said:

"Maida, surely you're not one of those simple souls who believe in anything in the papers."

"Certainly. I've been hearing it from all sides—how Craig has suddenly dropped you. Today in the mail I received a clipping. Some one cut it from one of those gossip columns. It says—well—I have it here—I'll read it. It says: 'The Craig Braden-Anne Austin conflagration is a case piff! and Linden Larue, chief lure for Hoffington, in a new ermine coat, is helping Craig carry the torch.'"

Anne laughed. The laugh was not convincing.

"I haven't the remotest. Mean what it means," Maida went on, "except I know it's something dreadful. You should be able to command enough respect from Craig to keep him from flaunting chorus girls, when every one's expecting you to announce your engagement any minute."

"Sorry, Maida," was Anne's cold reply. "I've no control over Craig Braden."

"Then get some control over him. You're the envy of every girl you know, in spite of what's happened to your father and the rest of everything. You're simply got to make a spot of it. Can't expect help from me. Jock is absolutely cleaned out and we're living on the income of my trust. Running the house with three maids and a gardener—even the butler's gone. Get Craig and make it up, whatever's happened. One would think after the mess your father made of it—"

"Good-bye," Anne cut in. "I have a luncheon engagement. And don't bring me up again, Maida. I'm sure you can behave like a human being."

Anne put down the receiver. She was trembling so that the receiver fell off the hook. She let it remain. Maida might take a notion to drive over and start a scene again.

"Don't expect help from me." As if she, Anne, ever had expected such a miracle. Down to three maids and a gardener. Three with a country house, a town house, two children, a passporting father, an adoring husband. Poor Jack! If he was living on Maida's money he was paying in humble bread.

At the hotel desk Anne paused. Were there any messages for Miss Austin?

No note. Did she expect a message? If so the clerk would instruct the operators.

No need. It was not important.

Then Miss Austin would please to receive this—the clerk handed her an envelope. He was watching her face as she turned it and with obsequious alacrity was ready to relay her status to the manager.

Her hotel bill. "The management would appreciate the settlement of the balance." That gossip item in the tabloid had traveled far and fast.

The Colony. Anne lingered in the foyer. Some one would surely come along. She disliked lunching alone, a girl with no escort to order and a swagger entered. Anne hurried to the cashier.

"Babe," she greeted, "back in town so early?"

"Yes, Austin." The tall girl's voice was pitched to a husky baritone. "How are you again, Austin?" Even as she spoke, her eyes were over and beyond Anne, flashed in pretense. Got to be stumbling along. Have a hostess somewhere about. Anne knew the girl by sight.

Anne watched the tall girl join a table near the entrance. She was certain the party at that table had not been arranged. She knew every member of it. She often had lunched at that very table with the same girl. Apparently the tall girl was now lunching. Surely they saw her and signaled her to join them. Especially it came to Anne that their failure to notice her standing there in the circumstances was deliberate. They were studiously avoiding her. They were not looking at her—were pretending. Anne turned, found her way unseeing, to the street.

"Taxi?"

"No thanks."

She began to walk to her hotel. Walk and think. Pay the bill she had slipped into her bag, pack her pack and leave. Leave for where? There were dozens of places.

Palm Beach, Florida, or a plantation near Charleston where she would be welcomed under any circumstances

Winnipeg Monarchs Enthroned Junior Champions of Dominion Defeating Sudbury in 3rd Game

Score is 4-1 With Game Played on Soft Ice

KEENAN STARS

First Time Trophy Ever Won on Home Ice

(By Herbert A. Honey)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Winnipeg, April 15.—(CP)—Junior amateur hockey's hall of fame opened its doors today to new heroes on the custodian of the record book blotted out an old score as Winnipeg Monarchs stood enthroned Dominion champions.

The Western Titlists won the Memorial Cup by defeating Sudbury Cub Wolves 4-1 in the third and deciding game of the annual classic international series here Saturday night. Monarchs won the first game 7-6 but the Sudbury Champions came back to deadlock the series by winning the second engagement 7-2.

During the past 14 years the West has followed Junior Hockey's richest reward eight times. On four occasions Winnipeg teams have been successful but Saturday's victory marked the first time the trophy has been won on home ice.

To Coach Harry Neil the Monarchs' victory was doubly sweet. Before a crowd, that packed the amphitheatre rink to capacity he watched his charges avenge a three-year-old Memorial Cup defeat at the hands of Copper Cliff Sudbury Wolves. In 1932, Neil's Monarchs were escorted from the title series after winning the first game.

Keenan Scores Two

Barr Keenan, dark-haired right winger who plays Rugby for Deer Lodge as a conditioner for the winter sport, sent the Winnipeggers into the lead for the second game and harrassed Davie Kemp in the Sudbury net throughout the game with rushes that netted two other goals and a third one possible.

Monarchs second tally from Keenan's stick came as the result of a solo rush mid-way in the second middle period. The Easterners were outskated on ice surfaced under "mushy" by mild weather. Pools of water which formed in centre ice added to the hazards.

Wolves warned to the task overcame a two-goal lead at the first period opened. Four and five-thousand fans rushed in on the Manarch citadel and Paul Gauthier, midget netman, gave a brilliant demonstration of rock-stopping as he kicked, sprawled and batted the rubber from the net.

The Western titlists took advantage of Wolves' missing stick to add to their goal margin. Johnny Prokash's counter Monarchs' third goal, when he scored a loose puck behind the Sudbury attack and slipped away to bat it past Kemp. Keenan netted the fourth on a pass from Prokash midway in the second Art Smart scored Sudbury's lone tally a minute later.

Groom Conacher For Defence Duty On Leaf Lineup

Halifax, April 15 (CP)—Lester Patrick of the New York Rangers and Jack Adams of the Detroit Red Wings have William Hallgren, referees to win the Allan Cup, and Connie Smythe, manager of the Toronto Maple Leafs, expressed the same opinion, while passing through Halifax tonight on their way home on a holiday.

The Leafs' mentor refused to single out any player as a prospective member of his team, but he said Jack Adams was there when looking for good prospects.

"He is supposedly enthusiastic about Rou Hudson and Owen Lennon," Smythe said. "From what I hear, I believe Lennon is fit now to catch on with any team in the National League. I know he is too youngster, but the majority of the best performers in the British Isles League are at the peak of their power around 30."

Turning to the Stanley Cup playoff series with the Montreal Maroons, he said, "when we play a long campaign we have three definite goals. First—the second championship; second—the league championship, and third—the Stanley Cup. We've yet to take all three in a row.

"That series with Bruins was terrific. Immediately afterwards we took on Maroons. Carelessness lost us that final battle. In the other two we were fairly lucky.

"Next season will probably be Charlie Conacher's last as a forward. Charlie tips the scales at 200 pounds, stripped. We're grooming Conacher to win his third consecutive scoring championship. After that I expect to see him take his place on defence."

ANGLERS TO MEET IN OPEN FORUM

William Lang and Tom Jull to Give Demonstrations

Two of the most outstanding anglers in the Dominion of Canada, William Lang and Thomas Jull of the Toronto Anglers' Association, have been procured to lecture at an open forum meeting of the Belleville Anglers' Club to be held at the City Hall, Wednesday night, Mr. Jull and Mr. Lang are both experienced on river, stream and lake and will not only address the audience, but give demonstrations and show action pictures of the proper manner in which to catch the elusive game fish.

The meeting is open to all and will be of great value to not only anglers but to all interested in the conservation of our natural resources in the water and in the value of tourist traffic and trade to this district. Already plans are in the making for re-stocking local streams and lakes in order, that inducements to tourists may be secured along those lines.

Moving pictures of fly fishing for trout in Ontario and salmon fishing in Newfoundland of both Mr. Jull and Mr. Lang in action will be included in the programme, that is to be terminated by a demonstration of the art. The meeting will be presided over by Mayor C. O. Tice, assisted by J. W. Shortt, President of the Belleville Anglers' Association and his able body of executive workers.

Members of the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, Kiwanis, Y's Men and Kinsmen's clubs will be represented along with interested persons from surrounding towns and villages, all interested in the conservation of game fish as an inducement towards increased tourist trade for the district. Such values along with others pertaining to recreation in fishing as an attraction to tourists and holiday seekers will be thoroughly dealt with by these two well known anglers, who have a world of knowledge to impart. Businessmen, sportsmen, outfitters and those who may operate summer camps and cottages should hear these men, who have been induced to lecture through the efforts of the Belleville Anglers' Club, Wednesday at the City Hall.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Four of the eight local district championship bowlers to win their titles during the Golden Gloves tournament last Tuesday, were picked among with one other to represent this district in the Ontario Golden Gloves finals at the Toronto Maple Leaf Gardens tomorrow night and Howard Wheeler. Bill Crawford, "Ebby" Fisher and Bobby Vincent are the local district champs to get the call, while Bob Cook, local lightweight will also accompany the S.W.A.A.C. contingent under Promoter Glen Allen

"I really don't know a terrible lot about the whole proceedings as I only forwarded our list of winners to Toronto on Friday," stated Promoter Allen today as he seemed surprised at the speed in which provincial finals are carried out. At any rate the local mittsers will be in against some real high class talent, as the Queen City amateurs of 1935 have been starring in the U.S.A. for some weeks past and naturally will be "rarin' on the bit." Wheeler is to fight feather-weight, Crawford, lightweight, Fisher welter and Vince middleweight. Bob Cook is a lightweight and may not get a chance to climb over the ropes. Incidentally the Toronto promoters have so many entries that two rings may be used in the Gardens at one time, thus saving time. The local contingent will travel to Toronto via motor, leaving early tomorrow. No indications as to who their opponents in the eliminations may be are available as the fighters name in the different classes, are tossed into a hat and drawn out.

The annual meeting of the Ontario Lacrosse Association is stated to be held in Toronto on Good Friday. The Athens Club is sending two official delegates to this conference with definite instructions to see that Belleville is afforded a representative grouping in lacrosse circles. Last year box lacrosse was inaugurated in Belleville and the game gained in popularity from the outset. The local delegation will present a motion to the effect that a Central Ontario Lacrosse League be formed, whereby all clubs in this part of the Province may get into the swim, if they so desire. Out in Peterboro they have formed a similar combination of 4 teams in the Lift Lock City. Millbrook and Lindsay, Naturally this leaves Cobourg, Campbellford and Belleville holding the well known bag. With this in mind the local Senila moguls are presenting their motion, whether it be good, bad or defeated. The local lacrosse-minded moguls are of the opinion, that a Central Ontario Association governed within themselves as in the O.B.L. would meet with success. The league would affiliate with the O.A.L.A. for playoff purposes, however.

Harry Moore, editor of the Trenton Courier-Advocate and for years a devoted lover of lacrosse, suggests in his sport columns, that Trenton is about ready for box lacrosse and outlines that such games could be played in the Trenton Arena for a limited time at least. Naturally, Mr. Moore would have to get a guarantee, whereas, who turned out last season's local games, on a percentage basis of players, gate receipts, and keeping that the Trenton Arena is not available for the Trenton Lacrosse Athletics if for any reason Trenton, Belleville and Peterboro don't strike an agreement and fall out in the local league. Furthermore, it helps matters behind them the Trenton fans, for these three competitive towns could but not afford here the best of lacrosse and last wherever the best of lacrosse is played there is always opportune setting happened to be under the prevailing circumstances, for example, the Belleville-Trenton R.C.A.F. intermediate hockey team, made a fairly good showing during winter, whereas if each organization had to pay a guarantee they would succeeded to no place in hurry. Amalgamations do not always succeed, but in the local atmosphere for the parties concerned, but the Kitchener-Waterloo league amalgamation seems to have borne fruit.

On Saturday night a local baseball fan hailed us on Front Street and fired this question at us: "If it rights for Belleville C.O.B.C. team is to have a professional-ex-big league coach?" Speaking candidly we could not exactly answer the question, but if such a coach has been approached, although he is a big league player but rather a pitcher who, it is said one time hurler for the Boston Red Sox. Before any negotiations will be completed or not remains to be seen, but as a rule baseball does not come to life in this part of the province until after Easter so it would appear that we have to wait until next week to let the lowdown on local diamond activities.

When the Deacon A.C. let the City Basketball Team, the champagnes last Friday night, even when feelings ran high, they showed keen sportsmanship in the face of defeat It seems Herb Burley of the "Y" squad, was automatically suspended through the medium of four technical fouls. The "Y" only had seven available, so the Deacons refused to accept the advantage of playing five men against four and the Basketball Body in time, that is the majority of the Deacons, were not to take the advantage of a short-handed team.

Majors Open Season Tuesday Experts Believing It Will be Best Year in Years

Tigers, Yankees And Indians Figured Best in American

GIANTS PICKED

Miracle if Dean Brothers Click For 49 Wins This Year

New York, April 15 (AP) — Not even the extraordinary fanfare, of the Major League baseball's opening salute tomorrow can obscure the fact that exactly 15 men will carry the main burden of proof into the 1535 championship campaigns. They are the managers, who will take charge as soon as the parades are over.

What do they think? Will Mickey Cochrane's Tigers or Frankie Frisch's Cardinals repeat? Has the outlook changed since the echoes of a world series died away?

The combined testimony, received from 15 out of 16 Major "master minds", is at hand.

In short, the answers are:

1. That it will be a "wide open" race in the American League most of the way, with the odds favoring a three-cornered finishing drive among the Tigers, New York Yankees and Cleveland Indians.

2. That the Giants, strengthened in vital spots and possessing the best four-man pitching staff in the National League, have an excellent chance to turn the tables on the Cardinals.

3. That the numerous chances in the playing ranks, featuring Babe Ruth's switch to Boston Braves, will add greatly to the general interest as well as uncertainty of the pennant races.

Stengel Picks Giants

Last season Manager Bill Terry of the Giants lived to regret the day he jestingly asked: "Is brooklyn still in the National League?" the club under the river sidelotted the crowning blow to Terry's bid for a second straight pennant. Now Casey Stengel, pilot of the Dodgers, turns the other cheek by picking the Giants to regain the championship this year.

Stengel's prediction is shared by Charley Dressen, aggressive young manager of the up-and-coming Cincinnati Reds. Even Dressen admits the 1935 Giants are the best he has managed and his outstanding rival, Frisch, concedes New York is the club to beat. Most leaders think it will be a miracle if the Dean brothers come close to repeating their feats of winning 49 games.

Cochran alone among the American League chieftains declined to commit himself definitely on the coming race. He did not conceal his confidence in training camp however. He thinks his Tigers can repeat and considers the Yankees a stronger threat than the Cleveland Indians, picked by a majority of baseball writers and Tris Speaker.

Bucky Harris of the Senators, Jimmie Dykes of the White Sox and Joe McCarthy of the Yankees agree it will likely be a three-cornered contest, in the long run, with New York battling Cleveland and Detroit.

Summing Up League Races

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Chicago, April 15.— (AP)— The American League has lost its Barnum but for entertainment a baseball show that promises to surpass them all for excitement and thrills.

Babe Ruth, great showman who for years packed 'em in, has joined the rival National League show, but the actors and maestros he left behind figure to put on more than make up for his departure with a production that will hold an intense interest from curtain to curtain.

Cleveland, a team that finished third last year, stands out as the general choice over Detroit and New York with Boston's Red Sox, Connie Mack's young, hustling Philadelphia Athletics and Washington given a chance.

Here is the setup with the "ifs" and trimmings, club by club:

Detroit: The Tigers, pennant winners last year by seven games over the new Ruthless Yankees, look far more formidable today than at the start of last season. A fine balanced club, but Schoolboy Rowe continue his effectiveness and will the Tigers get off to a good start for a change?

New York: In all fairness to the Babe, most of the Yankees feel they will be lost without his colorful personality by his departure, certainly defensively. The team spirit is higher. The infield, outfield and battery look for over the team to best although the starting pitchers, Red Ruffing and Vernon Gomez, have their hopes. Pitching-wise the game but Ralph Winegarner look for the Yanks to take his regular turn on the hill. If he is sound all will be well.

Boston — Can Lefty Grove come back? Whether he can the help acquired in the big winter deal with Washington, will give the Red Sox a great fighting chance for the pennant.

Philadelphia—Will Jimmie Foxx be more valuable behind the plate than at first? Also will Connie Mack's young pitchers, continue their rapid improvement? Connie Mack hopes so.

St. Louis: Not much change here and the Browns will finish fourth and probably a good starting pitcher in Roy Thomas and Tex Carleton.

Washington: The Senators, so riddled with injuries and sickness last season that they didn't play their first string once, may be

Chicago: If spring exhibitions mean anything, Jimmy Dykes has a greatly improved club with better punch and some young pitchers.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

(By Herbert W. Barker)

New York, April 15.—(AP)—The National League launches its 59th season tomorrow, aiming to keep the turnstiles clicking this summer with as colorful baseball talent as ever roamed its parks.

The managers are not counting alone on Babe Ruth, who shifted his base on home run operations to the National League after 21 years in the rival loop, to put the fabulous Braves out of the Red and produce a salutary effect on the receipts all along the circuit.

Two well-established brother acts, the incredible Deans of St. Louis and the Waners of Pittsburgh, will be on hand to add classic charm and will slender Carl Hubbell, No. 1 man of the New York Giants' pitching staff, to the list of stellar performers as Van Mungo of the Dodgers, Curt Davis of the Phillies, Mel Ott of the Giants and Wally Berger of the Braves,

Baseball owner's revolutionary experiment with night baseball scheduled for eight games, is expected to contribute to possibly the most prosperous season in years whatever its ultimate success.

Baseball observers foresee a two club race between Cincinnati and Frank Frisch's world champion St. Louis Cardinals and New York Giants.

Although the Cardinals were picked to win in the Baseball Writers' annual consensus there has been a great deal added to the Giants the past week or so.

It is still doubtful whether the Cardinals will have sufficient pitching strength to repeat even should Dizzy Dean again prove able to shoulder such a burden as they did last season.

Ruth, rapidly nearing the end of his playing days, probably will help the Braves only very little from a playing viewpoint, whatever his value at the box office and Philadelphia Nat'l Club appears foredoomed to the Second Division.

The Cincinnati Reds, seeking to terminate a four-year lease on the cellar berth, have not yet definite notion of rookies.

With the kind of a break from the weather, the four inaugurals tomorrow—at Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati and Philadelphia—should draw 125,000 fans.

Detroit And Lions Forced Into The Fifth Game

Vancouver, April 15.—(CP) — The hope that may go with the "little world series" between Vancouver and the Detroit Olympics of the International circuit Saturday extended one more period of the series, to be played Monday night.

Despite a three-goal splurge in the final period, Detroit dropped a 4 to 3 decision to Lions in the fourth game of the series last night and evened the standing at two wins each. Lions also won the first game 3 to 1, Detroit won the second 2 to 0 and the third 5 to 3 in overtime.

Winnipeg, April 15.—(CP)—Winnipeg Maroons threw back their heels last Saturday night and laughed at number 13 being unlucky.

The newly-crowned Dominion junior hockey champions won the coveted Memorial Cup in the 13th play-off game and it was on the 13th day of the month, too. They scored 13 goals against Sudbury Cub Wolves in the title series. They were dinner guests prior to the decidding game when 13 sat at the same table.

CLEVELAND TO SEE MAJOR HOCKEY

New York, April 15—(CP)—Ethel Canadiens or St. Louis Eagles will provide Cleveland hockey fans with major league professional hockey next season, according to Lucky Suthphin, now operating Cleveland Falcons in the International League.

Here attending the minor league conference today, Sutphin said he had "put $50,000 on the line" for a National League franchise and fully expected to operate it next season. He will erect a new arena in the city, seating 12,000 persons, he said, but whether the Eagles or Canadiens were purchased depended on negotiations which, he said, were still proceeding.

Sutphin said regardless of whether he secured a major league team or not he will continue operation of the Falcons.

Daily Short Story

"LOVE LETTERS"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

When John Henley was a child he accepted his Aunt Belle as a member of the family, not quite understanding her exact status, but not interested enough to inquire about it. Then, when he grew a little older, he asked his mother. "Hasn't Aunt Belle got a husband?"

His mother told him that his Aunt Belle, had never married, that she had, as Mrs. Henley expressed it, "remained true" to the memory of her sweetheart who, years before, had gone to Arizona and died there.

"Did the Indians kill him?" asked John. He was disappointed when his mother said no, when she explained that death had been caused by consumption. It took from John's fine romance from which would have gone with being able to tell his friends, "My Aunt Belle's sweetheart was killed by Indians."

Then, growing still older, he forgot his Aunt Belle's unhappy romance in one of his own. It wasn't unhappy, but it was filled with anguish, torment and sometimes despair, as, indeed, is all young love.

"Fight Too Much"

"You and Helen fight too much," his Aunt Belle would tell him when he sulked in his room. "You ought not to do that. When you're young you ought to be happy."

Then, a little at a time, she told him of the man she had loved so that John, grown now, began to see and understand her as she really was, not just someone who was in the house but a woman who had lived and suffered. He realized that he often wondered what kind of a head her sweetheart had had. He began an went on to wonder whether Helen would prove true to his memory if he died, too.

He doubted it. There was no engagement between them, only an "understanding" which, in their quarrels, was forgotten and had constantly to be renewed.

Then John went to Arizona. Graduated from an engineering school, he was offered a post which made certain that he would not soon. But it meant leaving Helen and he was not sure that she would be waiting when he came back. His Aunt Belle finally persuaded him to go and when he left she gave him a present, talking to him quietly and crying a little and making him promise that he would return it back to her.

He was gone for a year. Almost every day he wrote to Helen. At first three letters were infrequent and then, toward the end, she, too, was writing daily, writing such letters as he had hoped for but had feared he would not receive.

The Secret

Helen was waiting when he returned, waiting in the sense that he wanted her to be waiting, and when he asked her if she had really meant what she had written she told him yes.

"I wasn't sure when you went away," she said, "but your letters convinced me. They were beautiful letters, dear. I'm going to keep every one of them. Sometimes they used to make me cry, and I thought you would never come back."

He didn't intend them to make you cry," answered John. "What I wrote was only what I thought. Sometimes it's difficult for a man to write the things he wants to say. He just can't find the words. Some men have the gift. Others haven't. But they both love as much."

"I suppose so," she answered. "Maybe it doesn't matter. But I'm going to keep them just the same."

In the end it didn't matter—not even after he had told her. His Aunt Belle had advised him to do that. "Tell her the truth," she said. "Don't start with any secrets between you."

So he told her, after he had written back to her that Aunt Belle's "present" she had given him. "I had to change the words a little," he said. "I can understand why you still love him. I would like to have known the man who wrote those letters."

Then he told Helen, told her that the letters he had written to her from Arizona were copies of the letters his Aunt Blanche's sweetheart had written years before. "I was afraid to be original. I would have done anything. You don't mind?"

"No," she answered. "Why should I? It's not the letters I love. It's you."

Softly the door closed behind a slender Hindu woman, swathed in veils that left only her large dark eyes uncovered. A moment the mysterious visitor stood silently regarding Pat. Then she came closer to the girl.

She spoke rapidly in a low, musical voice, using excellent English. "I am the Ranee," she said. "At my peril, I have come to warn you. Though I am the Maharajah's favorite wife, nothing would save me if he knew my errand!"

Astonished, Pat started to speak, but the woman cautioned silence. "Only briefly can I stay. Listen carefully. Never shall you leave the palace alive! This I learn through my spies. I dare not tell you more."

"You will know soon enough. I know that women of your race prefer death to dishonor. Take these. Either will set you free when the time comes, from the hateful fate awaiting you." And she held forth something she wished Pat to take.

Me and pop and my cussen Artie was taking a wawk Sunday afternoon, me, and Artie being The Ones And Only Benny Darby Detective Agency, and he said, On the trale, pardner, did you see that lady that just went passed with another lady?

Sure, partner, why? I said, and Artie said, I deduct she knows a lot about cats.

Why, how, partner? I said, and he said, Because I heard the other lady call her Mrs. Kats, so she must be Kats's wife, so if she dont know a lot about Kats she must be pritty dum.

For Peet sake, pop said, and I said, Okay, partner, do you notice that kid with the white pants.

Meening some skinny little pid wawking along with his mouth part ways open, and Artie said, What about him, partner? and I said, I deduct he wears number 6 shoes.

Why do you pardner? Artie said, and I said, Because he looks as sick's he can be.

Cease firing, pop said, I'm a fortearing man, but there has always come a time in the history of every civilization, usually just before the fall, when tolerance has ceesed to be a virtue. That time has now arrived and it is my duty, as dictator to bind the unruly populace on high stools, and silence them with the creem of the sea, I said.

ADJOURN WEDNESDAY

Sir George Perley Rules Opposition Leader Out of Order

Ottawa, April 16—(CP)—Working against time the government seeks to get two measures through the House of Commons today in order to have them operative during the parliamentary adjournment which starts, Tuesday. Both are designed to improve economic conditions in Canada. One is the new public works bill; the other amends the Farm Loan Act.

A deadlock with the Senate on amendments to the Farm Loan Act developed when the Upper House made a long list of changes. Last week Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Finance, moved their adoption in the Lower House with one exception. He asked, he believed, the Senate would not insist on this point. Again last night he sought to get the measure through. On both occasions opposition members protested against the Senate amendments and pressed for extended consideration.

Estimates Passed

The public works bill is designed to put some $33,000,000 in circulation through wages and materials. This is in addition to the $30,000,000 voted last year of which nearly $30,000,000 remains to be spent—even though nearly all of it has been earmarked for specific projects.

The bill introduced yesterday by Hon. Hugh Stewart, Minister of Mrs. Vanderelst evaded a police cordon and drove her limousine to the main prison gates.

There she was hailed by a constable, who asked her for her driver's license. Other cars carrying some of Mrs. Vanderelst's followers and equipped with loudspeakers to spread her message were turned back.

Landscape Looks Wintry, Snow Comes Without Frost

Accompanied by a chilling drop in temperature, which reached just five degrees above freezing at the lowest point, snow fell over the city and district late last night and early this morning, leaving a blanket in the city and fields in the country, a light blanket of white.

Little damage, however, from the near-freezing wave was reported by farmers throughout the section, although fall wheat and clover are the crops most on some farms, the comparatively high temperatures accompanying the flurry resulted in little if any loss.

In the western sections of the province, great loss is reported following the drop as low as 12 degrees of frost. Clover and fall wheat loss is expected to be considerable.

Snow has been falling for 12 hours at Brockville, and at Kitchener the drop in temperature was sufficient to freeze radiators of automobiles.

Even though the large flakes continued to swirl through this city early, it should be drafted by a constituent assembly representative of the whole people. Dr. Arthur Beauchesne, Clerk of the House of Commons today told the parliamentary committee studying the proposals to amend the B.N.A. Act here. The Imperial Parliament should, after Canada's new constitution was written, be requested to repeal the Act.

Ottawa, April 16—(CP)—The matter of amending the British North America Act is one for discussion between the Dominion and the Provinces, according to various provincial Attorneys General, telegrams from whom were read today to the parliamentary committee considering the B.N.A. Act.

REDOUBLE EFFORT TO END SESSION

Likely Members Will Start Debate on Estimates Today

Toronto, April 16 (CP)— With three days left of the current session, Ontario legislators redoubled their efforts today so the two months' old session could be ended by Thursday night.

Estimates have yet to be considered but it was expected a start would be made on these today. Another possible subject for debate at today's sitting was Premier Mitchell Hepburn's bill to amend the Liquor Control Act.

The Premier said last night Easter prorogation was necessary so the government could consider several pressing problems confronting it. He stated the contract recently considerable, time to consider the power situation, proposals for developing the lignite coal beds in the north and rehabilitating the pulp and paper industry.

Three bills supplied debating material yesterday, chief of them being Minister of Welfare David Croll's measure to amalgamate four only after Conservatives staged a filibuster. Apparently critical the government for not producing the report of the Royal Commission on investigating amalgamation. The Opposition did not attack the principal of amalgamation.

Conservative opposition flared up again towards Attorney-General A. W. Roebuck's bill to make positions on the Workmen's Compensation Board tenable at pleasure. Consideration of this bill in committee proceed the major debate last night.

The Liquor Act amendment, chief provision of which is to allow beverage rooms in local option areas which voted to establish a liquor store the vote to considerable debate when it came up for third reading. Similar discussion by Leader Geo. S. Henry adjourned the debate.

Act here. The Imperial Parliament should, after Canada's new constitution was written, be requested to repeal the Act.

Wigle, (Essex South) to provide for issuance by the island council of pheasant shooting licenses during the period in which shooting is permitted.

Six pair of pheasants were placed there in 1927 and the number increased greatly, said Mr. Taylor. After consulting with residents, the department decided on a 2 for 1 hunting license there last fall. The department also agreed to purchase any surplus birds remaining after last fall's hunt but the island had none.

Then took which three months before had been eating them ragged had turned into an asset," said Mr. Taylor.

BURIED ALIVE AS EXPLOSION ROARS THRU WORKINGS

All But Seven of 196 Miners in Shaft Accounted For

CAUSE IS MYSTERY

Buried More Than Six Hours And Air Supply Quite Short

Stellarton, N.S., April 16 (CP)—Seven coal miners were feared to have been killed today in a terrific explosion that sent hundreds of tons of rock And coal crashing down on their working place in the Allan shaft, where 96 men perished in a 1918 explosion.

More than four hours after the blast they were still entombed 1,500 feet underground and rescue workers were trying valorly to fight their way through a barrier of fallen debris, that clogged the passageway for an estimated 100 feet.

Way Is Blocked

"The mass of coal and stone blocked the way to safety for any possible survivors, though little hope was held any still lived. Searching fellow workers expressed belief all must have been buried alive, when the explosion roared through the workings.

All others of the 196 men, who entered the pit this morning were accounted for, according to Superintendent D. H. McLean of the Acadia Coal Company and Dominion Steering, sub-district board member for the United Mine Workers. They were all on the surface except for seven crews and about 15 officials who had started injury to the pit bottom when the explosion occurred and the trapped collieries.

Cause of the explosion was a mystery. The nearest workers, 1,500 feet away from the spot, where the seven were working, said they heard only a dull, muffled thud followed by a whistling blast of air, that swept one man off his feet and hurled him several yards.

Out for 'Gander' on Main Street Meanest Swan in Town Meets Master

Wading River, L.I., April 16 —(CP)—Samuella, meanest swan, that ever ruffled on impeccable feather, is gone and the pool for players of Wading River have lost, that furtive look today.

The bird purchased to enhance the beauty of the town's pond, turned out to be the roughest, toughest and nastiest fighting fellow on webbed feet. At the drop of a hat he would fight man or beast and launched many a furious if futile attack on the more brightly colored trucks.

In their subjection, the townfathers thought a companion might sugar Samuella's acid disposition so they voted funds for a female swan. About two days of Samuella's taunting and the female flew away for night never to return.

But Samuella went too far. Out for a "gander" on main street, he cranked up behind George Gales and launched a rear attack. George retreated until he found a stout stick and then laid it on Samuella's neck with all the power of his 15-year-old right arm. An unofficial coroner's jury decided the bird-dictator died of mortification, rather than George's blow.

WANDERING BOY DRIFTS TO TWEED

Ian Davidson, 12, is Sent Back to Home in Toronto

Missing from his home at 25 Beech Avenue, Toronto, for the past seventy days, Ian Davidson, 12, whose wandering footsteps and an extraordinary glib tongue for one so youthful had carried him over 200 miles in his devious wanderings was returned to his Toronto home from Tweed under escort last evening.

The youthful wanderer ended his journey in Tweed yesterday where he at once came in the charge of Provincial Constable Hayes who questioned the boy and then held him.

"I was kidnapped," smiled Davidson when questioned by the constable who attempted to find out how he had arrived at his present home between his home and Tweed.

"My parents sheared me, and I ran away," again said when further questioned.

Under further questioning the boy was said to have changed his story three or four times. Finally communication with Toronto revealed the address of the parents and later the youth was placed on the train under escort and taken to his home.

Leaving Toronto the boy had hitch-hiked along the highway, passed through Belleville on Monday and landed in Shannonville. From there he turned north and landed on the outskirts of Tweed. In his aimless wanderings he had no preference as to place or distance as long as he kept going, it was stated.

Toronto, April 16 (CP)—Ian Davidson, 12, who had been missing from his home here since Friday and was found at Tweed, near Belleville, and returned home today told police he was kidnapped by two men in a car who drove around here after he overheard them talking about a bank.

He said one of the men hailed him and said: "Get into the car. You look too much." He spent two nights in the car and was not molested, he said.

They released him at Shannonville Sunday and told him to go home. Tweed police found him with John Isbister, Moneymore Indian, who had fed him Sunday, and communicated with Toronto police believing him to be a youngster who had escaped from a Children's Aid inspector.

DUCK BEDS BAITED, BIRDS EASILY SHOT

Slaughter on Shores of Wolfe Island is Condemned

Toronto, April 16 (CP)—Farmers on Wolfe Island, opposite Kingston, fed wild ducks during autumn migration and a wholesale scale of slaughter were high they called clients in Rochester and Syracuse and these would rip the flocks to shreds with their guns, George T. Pulford, (Lib. Leeds) told the Ontario Legislature Fish and Game Committee today.

"I have seen them once" said Mr. Pulford. "It was nothing but slaughter. It was the most glaring example of the lack of sportsmanship I have seen."

Mr. Pulford declared farmers would not allow Canadian sportsmen on their land. Nevertheless the Leeds member added shooting around Brockville and Prescott was bad because the ducks flew to the baited beds on Wolfe Island.

The committee carried such slaughter must stop and the Game and Fisheries Department estimating game supervisors would be posted in the Wolfe Island area and also on the shore of Lake Erie, near Detroit.

Hand Car Beats Engine in Race

Lindsay, April 16.—The frondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway, which runs from here through Haliburton to Ottawa via Bancroft, met with the crowning indignity of defeat during a recent trip.

The C.N.R. Bowland Junction a coach jumped the track, by way of precaution, Engineer Bill, with the assistance of the passengers, it was lifted back on the rails. Reaching Tory Hill, the engine appeared to have developed a bad cough, and on a grade just east of the village one cylinder gave out. The crew began repairs to the train on, at a not too pleasing pace.

One passenger, however, happened to be a mail contract road foreman, and sighted him with his hand-car a short distance up the track. Jumping from the train, the passenger rushed up ahead, boarded the hand-car, and offered his assistance to the road employee.

The train was five hours late; the hand-car got in two hours ahead of it.

Snow Falls, Temperatures Drop, Accompanied by High Winds

Western Ontario woke up to a wintry day last week, hail and rain fell today with lowering temperatures. As much as half an inch of snowfall was registered at some points but as the day wore on the snow disappeared with the sun getting warmer.

There was heavy rain in Peterborough but the storm had not settled completely over Eastern Ontario. At Brockville, springtime conditions prevailed.

A wide-an-hour gale struck London during the night and was still blowing strong out of the west. It brought with it heavy rain and snow, greenhouses suffering some damage.

Many but welcome rain fell Thursday night at Kitchener and the precipitation changed to snow today, the flakes soon vanishing as they hit the ground.

Snow today at Brantford followed heavy rain during the night, farmers welcoming the moisture for their fall crops. At Kitchener, snow and hail fell giving the city a wintry appearance until a slowly rising temperature made the flakes and stones disappear.

At Sudbury in Northern Ontario, rain which started to fall early today changed to snow with a slight drop of temperature. Ice on northern lakes is commencing to break up and airplane service from Lake Ramsay, Sudbury, has been discontinued.

June 3 to Sept. 15—Kingston.

July 14 to Sept. 14—Brantford.

Sudbury Saving Time:

North Bay, Gelt, Sault Ste. Marie, Windsor, London, Kitchener, Woodstock, Stratford, Thomas, Port Arthur, Peterborough, Brockville, Sturgeon Falls, Kirkland Lake (Timmins on Daylight-Saving Time). All Western Provinces.

POLICE COURT

A local motorist who was implicated in a smash-up on Dundas Road, last Friday evening, pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving in Police Court this morning before Magistrate F. J. Butler, K.C., today. A fine of ten dollars and costs was assessed the offender, while his driving privilege was cancelled for a period of six months. The court pointed out, that absolutely too many reckless driving charges had been dealt with in a lenient manner of late, but a more drastic measure would ensue unless a general decline in reckless driving was immediately noticeable.

Twenty three transients were afforded a warm night's lodging at the police station last night, but only two men were allowed to continue on their various journeys today. The two remaining "hoboes" were detained for the matter of a few hours by the police since it had been learned that three suspicious characters from the police early yesterday in the municipality of attending a few extra hours in the cell block, the two men were liberated and told to "move on."

James Alexander, Trenton, reported a slight damage accident to the police department late yesterday afternoon. Alexander informed the police, that he had collided with a motor car, while backing his truck from the curb on Front to Dundas Street. The automobile was, travelling west on Dundas Street. Damage resulted and the automobile driver did not deem it necessary to swear up such an action for the damage done his car. Both motorists seemed satisfied to pay their own costs in the matter.

A city-wide drive against local motorists and riders endangering pedestrians by riding their bicycles on the sidewalk was opened by the police yesterday.

Riding Bikes On Sidewalks To be Curbed

A concerted police drive has been launched against local bicyclists who repeatedly ride their bicycles over the footbridge and on local sidewalks impeding the progress of pedestrians at times going so far as to force the citizens afoot from the sidewalk with their arrogant manner of riding on the sidewalks. Late Saturday afternoon four local bicycle riders were apprehended by local police infringing on the city by-law in regards to the ridding of bicycles on city sidewalks. Court action in these cases are likely to follow.

The police drive against these offenders came directly following numerous complaints by local pedestrians and a general warning to such offenders by the police. "We have tried to be as lenient as possible by issuing warning, but without any success. Now a police official today as he intimated that stiff fines would be meted out in all such cases in the future, when they were brought before magistrate by the police authorities the city by law calls for a fine, not exceeding $50, or or a jail sentence not exceeding three months, for all offenders of this by-law." We intend to stamp out this riding of bicycles on local sidewalks and more especially on the footbridge over the C.N.R. tracks," declared one

POWER BALANCE SHIFTS TO CITIES

Mayor Houde Warns Legislators of Trend

MONTREAL, April 16.—Parliament in Ottawa, and the Legislatures of the nine provinces, are all under the thumb of the farmer vote and now that the balance of Canada's population weighs in favor of the urban centres, all electoral maps will have to be redrawn to give a louder voice to cities and towns "where there is the least social stability," Mayor Camillien Houde, K.B.E., said yesterday.

He was talking to landlords of Montreal, who, in complaining of sole matters in general, had said that nobody cares to protect the proprietors of Canada. Others had been asked for legislation to cut 1 per cent of mortgage interest; no result; Quebec had been asked extension of the moratorium for five years, and interest at 5 per cent refused.

"But can't you see?" the mayor asked the delegation. "All of the Legislatures, the Parliament itself, they are all dominated by the rural vote. Even if the governments were beaten in all the cities, what do they care? They have the country.

"Take the mayors' conference, with its demand that the national credit be placed at the disposal of municipalities in difficulty. That was a move to cut interest rates, and extend the benefit to mortgages. Here you have mayors from all over the country. They make the demand. Others legislate. If the dominating vote in Parliament had been from the urban centres, do you think there would be no response? We would have had it at once!

"All one thing, the city runs the country. Now it is different. The country runs the cities. For a while that was not bad. For the man in the rural area is more stable; never will any Canadian revolution start at Ste. Emilie de l'Energie! But since so much of the population has now passed into the cities, it will be an absolute necessity for the urban centres to be given a louder voice in Parliament and in the Legislatures. They will have to give more seats to the cities."

SOFTBALLERS AT TRENTON MEET

The losers had a margin on the total pins but the Furies took the last game by two pins to take four games. F. Pye's record was high mac of the series with a six string of 1297. The scores were as follows: Furies (4) 1297; A. Fisher (3) 507; P. Wilkinson (3) 564; C. Trumpour, 1116; R. Roy 1104; H. R. McKee (1) 171; E. A. Smith (3) 508; handicap 38; total 3602.

Flymouth—W. Richards 1227; G. Weaver (3) 483; W. Crews 1161; P. Amodeo 1215; C. Aziz 944; F. Sherbert (1) 153—total 5695

GARBAGE TENDERS REFERRED BACK

Market and City Property Chairman Absent From City

Interest in the awarding of a contract for garbage collection in the city was manifest by the large number in the Council Chamber, when City Council convened on Monday evening but no action was taken. Mayor Tice explained that as the chairman of Market and City property was absent from the city and also as there were a number of aldermen absent from the session, the awarding of the contract was left in abeyance until the next meeting of the Council. The City Clerk has received a large number of tenders but no move has been made to open same.

The matter was one of short duration although a considerable length of time was spent by the members in committee. Mr. Eugene Lang of The Ontario Shore as of Chicago, Ill., was present and discussed the gas situation in this city with respect to the recommendation passed at a former meeting but no definite agreement was reached as the matter was not discussed or mentioned on the floor of the council. It is more than likely that the council will effect an amicable settlement which will be satisfactory to the corporation and the Gas Company.

Question Referred Back

Daylight Saving for the coming summer in this city was mentioned but the whole question was referred back to committee. Letters were received from the Manufacturers' Association, The Railway Association of Canada, The Retail Merchants' Association of this city and others requesting that Daylight Saving be put in effect but as mentioned, the question was sent back for further consideration.

Thomas Thorne, who has acted as dog inspector for the city for the past number of years, was again engaged to carry on his duties for three months as from April 15th, the salary to be $50.00 per month.

The chairman of the Light, Alderman Frank Domenico, requested that two lights be placed on Dufferin Avenue between Bridge Street and Dundas Street and also the same lighting granted, The Belleville Boys' Camp Committee was given permission to hold a Tag Day on June 1st to raise funds to further the work among the boys.

Applications Granted

A letter was received from Miss Elizabeth Corbett requesting permission to erect a grocery store valued between $2,000 to $2,000 at the corner of Dundas and Newberry streets. The application was granted. Plans drawn by the Ruddy Company and now on this property will be moved to a place suitable to the council and the committee.

City Engineer, Charles A. Mott asked the Council to name a committee to inspect the roads in the city as regards the feasibility of oiling same and His Worship named Alderman Safe, McCreary, Barlow, and the city engineer as that committee. There being no by-laws and no new business, the Council adjourned. Those present were—Mayor Tice and Aldermen Wills, Hill, Arnott, Thompson, Foley, Guthridge, Domenica, Cushing, Barlow and Harvey. Alderman Thompson was in the Chair in the committee of the whole.

COMBINED AGES OF SISTERS 265 YRS.

All in Good Health And Long Residents of Tweed District

Three sisters, whose combined ages total 265 years, spent Sunday quietly at the home of the eldest, Mrs. Dezela of Addington. Mrs. Dezela is 97 years, still in good health and remarkably active for her advanced age.

The occasion of the meeting of the sisters was the birthday of one of the three, Mrs. N. Lajoie, of Tweed, who completed her 80th year on Sunday. The youngest, Mrs. Louis Cournoyea, 82 years, is also of Tweed.

The three sisters are daughters of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Rashotte, and were born at Sorel, Quebec. They came to Tweed with their parents, while quite young, and were among the first settlers in that section. All three are remarkably preserved and have always enjoyed good health.

Mrs. LaJoie, whose birthday was celebrated on Sunday is the mother of Mrs. Frank Voyer of Hewitt. Besides Mrs. Voyer she has six children, 26 grandchildren and 19 great grandchildren.

CAMPAIGN OVER C.N.R. ATTACKED

Ottawa, April 16 (CP)— E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was described in the House of Commons as Canada's "arch enemy" number one for his attacks on the Canadian National system. F. O. Sanderson (Lib, South Perth) applied the epithet in speaking on the Government to stop the propaganda or combat it.

The Western Ontario Liberal claimed Mr. Beatty was attempting to poison the mind of the people against their own railway and to depreciate it as his company eventually could gobble it up and operate the two systems in Canada.

Minister of Railways and Canals Ian Mackenzie said he could not instruct Hon. C. P. Fisher, chairman of the Canadian National Railways board of trustees, to make speeches but he himself had made three speeches recently against Mr. Beatty's viewpoint. The campaign was not over, C.N.R. were made, someone should correct them but it was debatable whether Mr. Pulliver and Mr. Beatty should cover the country in a speaking vendetta.

"My own opinion," Dr. Manion said, "was the feeling for amalgamation was so slight in spite of Beatty's arguments there was no great body of public opinion for it in this country."

Mr. Beatty was conducting a systematic campaign, Mr. Sanderson claimed, to attack the credit of the C.N.R. He believed the Government should stop him because he, the head of the C.N.R.'s chief competitor should be the last man to attack it.

SENTENCED TO DIE

Saint Peter Port, Guernsey Island, April 15—(AP)—Gertrude Elisabeth Delamare, first woman to be tried for murder on this picturesque channel island, today was sentenced to death for cutting the throat of her employer with a bread knife.

The 30-year-old "handywoman" sobbed bitterly as the bailiff—corresponding to the judge in Great Britain—pronounced up. The verdict was returned by a majority of the jurymen after 10 minutes.

In front of their bench was the body of which the murdered farmer was found.

TUESDAY CHOSEN AS CLINIC DAY

V. O. N. Believe This Date Will be Better Suited For Mothers

With a total of 233 calls registered during the month, March this year set a record in the number of homes visited in the city by nurses of the local Royal Victorian Order, it was shown in a report for the month submitted by Miss Scurfield, at the regular meeting of the Order held last evening.

A steady gain in number of calls answered has been noted during the past four month period. In December visits numbered 191; in January 427 were answered; in February the number had increased 498. The majority of calls were for complaints following a recent rash of mild influenza, and for maternity cases.

During the month 180 babies were treated at the five clinics held by the nurses who also gave instruction of infant care to the mothers, who attended. A suggestion by Nurse Scott that the usual Friday afternoon clinic date be changed to Tuesday afternoon of each week met instant favor with the meeting. The change will occur in May, when the first clinic will be held on the first Tuesday of that month, continuing on the same day of each week thereafter. This day was chosen by the ladies from the mothers' point of view.

A request for representation at the 19th annual general meeting of the Board of Governors of the Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada to be held at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on May 1 and 2, resulted in President Mrs. T. Holland; Treasurer, Jos. Imlah; T. D. Ruston and Past President Fred Smythe being named to attend as local representatives. Miss Scurfield will be the delegate.

Acknowledgement with thanks of a recent donation of $50.00 made by local Kiwanis Club will be made by the order.

Impressions of Europe of Today Told to Rotary by F.H. Deacon

Belleville Young Man Conveys Views of Countries He Visited

Prosperity in Paris depends a great deal upon the tourist trade and as tourists have not been flocking to France lately business there is feeling the pinch, according to Fred H. Deacon, who recently returned from a trip overseas. Mr. Deacon gave his impressions of the trip to the Belleville Rotary club Monday in a very interesting way. Paris stores and styles are quite attractive but have nothing on similar places of business in Canada and the United States. Switzerland was visited with its wealth of scenery in mountains, lakes and rivers, one of the principal attractions in the little kingdom being the winter sports. Skiing in Switzerland is a business as well as a sport and there is a ski school there where 1,200 pupils are enrolled. Costumes for the sport also constitute a lucrative business.

London, Manchester and various other places in England were found very interesting and impressive.

Manchester, centre of the cotton industry, is another of the European competition. Of the forty million spindles in Manchester, many are idle, and many spindles have been dismantled. Japan has now nine million cotton spindles.

London has many things which impress the visitor, especially the antiquity and dignity of the public buildings, and the business efficiency as practiced by English business men is a matter of admiration. Firms with a business background of more than two hundred years, base their success on fair dealing and fair profits, the small purchaser receiving the same treatment as the large buyer, and mass buying is not encouraged.

The British Iddustries Fair was visited and proved a revelation in the scope of business done by English manufacturers. Everything is shown to advantage and buyers come from every part of the world.

A brief visit by motor to Scotland was described vividly by the speaker, who was greatly impressed by the magnificent Scottish War Memorial in Edinburgh. This is without doubt the finest, most dignified, and impressive memorial to the dead in the world. "Scotland's tribute to her glorious dead; not a memorial of War but a Shrine of Remembrance; a place of sacred memories —the story in stone and bronze of a nation's triumphant effort."

Various places of historic interest were visited, and the result of his travels in England and Scotland and observations, was a feeling of pride that he too belonged to this great Anglo-Saxon race with its splendid background of character, courage and common sense.

Mr. Deacon's address was very interesting and informative including a large element of observation and appreciation of old world attitudes.

The speaker was introduced by Rotarian Fred Bernstein, and Rotary appreciation was expressed by E. V. Illsley and President Jamieson Donne.

A three-minute talk by Charles Dolan gave some inside information about bird banding and birds and the interest to be found in the study of birds. Mr. Dolan is secretary for the Belleville Rotary club and is also an authority on fish culture, the small purchaser receiving the same treatment as the large buyer, and mass buying is not encouraged.

Auto Kills Woman As She Saves Child

New York, April 16—Mrs. Ida Pratt, 61 years old, of 323 Thirteenth Street, Union City, N.J. was fatally injured when she was struck by an automobile as she was crossing the highway near the Player Hill Cemetery in Pleasantville where she had visited a grave, the police announced today. They said Mrs. Pratt saw the car approaching and pushed her granddaughter, Betty Schneider, 5, out of danger.

The child stumbled and fell. She and her grandmother were taken to the North Hudson Hospital at Weehawken. Mrs. Pratt was dead when she arrived there.

The police arrested the driver of the car.

Three-Platoon Plan Rejected

Toronto, April 16 (CP)—The Ontario Legislature Legal Bills Committee today rejected a bill of Ian Strachan, (Lib. Toronto-St. George) to institute a three platoon system for Ontario firemen instead of the present system of two platoons. The bill had it passed would have meant firemen worked in three shifts of eight hours each.

Five fighters were the only civic employees not working on an eight hour day schedule, said John W. Bruce, of Toronto, representing the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada.

He cited figures showing the bill would mean an additional cost for fire-fighting of $568,442 in Toronto, $12,620 in Kingston, and $18,353 in Kitchener.

"If we put this bill through there will be war," said Controller Sam McBride, of Toronto. "The firemen's job is the best in the world. I'd rather have it than be controller."

The committee approved of an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act requiring bicycles and tricycles being equipped with gongs or horns.

THE WHITE PAPER

It will likely be the fact that in the course of time, Britain will be credited with having won a great victory over the forces of armament by the White Paper which she issued on March 4th. That document was timed so that it lifted the curtain on present trends and revealed a condition of which many did not dream. The navy revelation was succeeded by the announcement of Hitler that he had scrapped the treaties and was going to use conscription. Subsequent events with the numerous visits to world capitals and to Stresa, Italy, were further results of the publication of the White Paper.

British diplomacy knew what was going on, though it is doubtful if Germany would have announced her intention of conscription, if the revelation had not come when it did.

The White Paper has perhaps done more to put far away into the future the possibility of war than any other recent event.

Such a White Paper could not have been published twenty years ago, at least not until trouble had broken out. Today a White Paper is issued and there is no war. The world is growing to think better of outspoken truth.

If there should come out of the forthcoming meetings which are planned and which remain to be planned some steps which will facilitate disarmament, the British White Paper and those who were behind it will deserve the praise.

To the outsider it looks like one of the most clever moves which has ever been the part of diplomats to make.

The thing seems more truth and less pretence about what is clear to see.

In further proof comes Britain's plan not to drop the cause of disarmament, as announced in the speech of Premier MacDonald.

WHY BRITISH RECOVERY

The British people have moved a great step towards recovery.

There is no diminution in thrift in Britain.

Greater buying power is in the hands of the people.

These are some of the things brought out in the new budget which promises a surplus of over $26,000,000 by this time next year.

To the people who have laid heavy burdens on their own shoulders and on their own pocketbooks and bank accounts, the success of Britain is gratifying.

It is the reward for doing things. It is not mere magic or the chanting of some charm. Britishers have taxed themselves heavily and are the first to find their way out of the woods of the depression, and it is no wonder that this is the good old way to get out of financial morasses.

British manufacturers, retailers and workers are getting the reward of the upward trend in better prices and wages. With better prices it is more easy to pay taxes.

What started the improvement? No doubt the chief reason was psychological, the state of mind of the people to face with determination the depression for it was depression of spirit as well as depression of material values. National government will be taken by some as one of the signs of this determination. At any rate the material evidences of recovery are now at hand in Britain with money flowing, and better prices prevailing.

GADGETS

Modern economic man does not live by bread alone but by gadgets. Civilization is largely gadgetry, whether of the body or the spirit. As nations rise from the primitive status they spend more and more on frills and furbelows, on fads and fancies, on flourishes and ruffles, on boondoggles and the ancient Greek dialects. These are all legitimate economic occupations in normal times. When the economic machine stalls, the practitioners in these gadget trades have a right to live, along with other unemployed trades.

Five years ago the American people spent out of every dollar—for it had a dollar income—perhaps 30 cents on food, 10 cents on clothes, 15 cents on housing. This left at least 40 cents in every dollar for gadgetry, for health, education, recreation, ostentation, perambulation. Americans actually spent 20 cents out of every dollar on a gadget known as an automobile. Out in Manchuria the peasant would be puzzled by a social order which spends two-thirds as much on gas as on food.

Five years ago there were almost 50,000,000 breadwinners in the United States. Thirty million of these would account for all the farmers, fishermen, forest workers, miners, industrial workers and transportation employees. The workers who produced and delivered everything that we consume would be only 60 per cent of all the employed.

The other twenty million gainfully employed Americans in 1930 were in the fur-below and boon-doggle occupations. Six million were in trade, three and a quarter million in the professions, nearly a million in government service, four million in offices, two and a five million in domestic and personal service.

Actually one might say that the gadget trades had fully half our workers. A good many farmers supply the raw materials for ice cream "devils." A great many factory workers and mechanics produce automobiles, bridge lamps and swimming pools. Many railroad men are engaged in transporting people to Miami and Southern California.—New York Times.

FIRST MINISTER BENNETT

Wednesday the Canadian Senate, which the House of Commons is rather inclined to snub, gave the other body a little lesson. In a bill creating an Economic Council the House designated the "Prime Minister" as its chairman. The Senate amended by substituting "First Minister." The House meekly accepted this correction. The lawyers of the Senate searched the statutes. They could find no mention of "Prime Minister." "First Minister" is the official phrase. This is news to most of us; perhaps to most Canadians. In the British "Who's Who," Right Hon. Richard Bedford Bennett is described as "Prime Minister."

The Canadian, American and British press habitually call him "Prime Minister." So he is in fact, with which the shower of gold which has come his way up, Edwin Porritt, in "Evolution of the Dominion of Canada" (1918), speaks of the head of the Government as "First Minister." Our literary and well-beloved friends The Canadian Annual Review and The Canadian Almanac are technically wrong, with most of the rest of us, in using the customary title. They prefer usage to Dryasdust.

In England the notion of a "First Minister" or even a "Chief Minister," was long repellent to many patriotic souls. Walpole had more power than his predecessors, but it was seriously imperfect. In his time, and for many years after, there was a Secretary of State for the northern part of Europe and another Secretary of State for the southern. The former also attended to the affairs of Scotland, his colleague to those of the colonies. Both had a right to meddle in Ireland. The Home deparment was shared between them, and "each might issue orders to the Admiralty and the War Office."

Sir Robert could hardly be "sole" Minister, though he was often accused of it. The younger Pitt was the first real "First Minister"—Prime Minister, in fact. Not till 1905 did the Prime Minister have a large office and staff. Even recently enough, in a statute entitling him to follow in the order of precedence the heels of the Archbishop of York. As head of the Conservative party, Disraeli, we understand it, became First Minister automatically after taking oath as Secretary of State for External Affairs; but perhaps we are getting out of our depth. —New York Times.

TO THE RIDICULOUS

Every Canadian can think of plenty of reasons for opposing a dictatorship. One of the most cogent is the fact that the natural tendency to glorify the dictator's personality eventually is carried so far that it turns into something very like outright idolatry—and when that happens the government becomes irresponsible, in the sense that it is quite beyond control of anyone but the man at the very peak.

This tendency is amply illustrated by recent despatches from Russia. An American correspondent in Moscow undertook to tabulate references to Stalin in speeches by party workers. He found that every speech contained something like "Our dearly Beloved leader," "Our darling Stalin," "Our beat of all," "Our guiding star," and so on.

Such fulsome phrases are nothing less than ridiculous. But they are simply the logical outcome of a tendency inherent in any kind of one-man rule.

Hand things over to a dictator, and you have to glorify him—even if it gags you. —Guelph Mercury.

Most arts require long study and application; but the most useful art of all, that of pleasing, requires only the desire. —Chesterfield.

The temperate are the most truly luxurious. By abstaining from most things it is surprising how many things we enjoy. —Simms.

I have four good reasons for being an abstainer—my head is clearer, my health is better, my heart is lighter, and my purse is heavier.—Guthrie.

Every man is rich or poor according to the proportion between his desires and his enjoyments.—Johnson.

There are two things needed in these days: first, for rich men to find out how poor men live; and second, for poor men to know how rich men work.—E. Atkinson.

The law is past depth to those, who without heed, do plunge into it.—Shakespeare.

BILL'S BOOMERANG

BILL NYE IS A STRANGER to many newspaper readers of today but to old-timers he is a gladsome ghost of the humorists of yesterday. Bill Nye was one of the first columnists, and his stuff was among the first to be syndicated, which in his day meant a column of platematter, or "boilerplate" as it was known. Fancy prices were not known in those days and a column of Bill Nye could be purchased very cheaply—cheaper than it could be set by hand, I say, for Bill Nye's second-rate stuff, having appeared in whatever affluent journal was at the time able to afford Bill Nye's personal attention and his first-run humorosities. Bill Nye was not hilariously funny, his humor was of a more subtle kind, but he sure had many admirers.

Edgar Wilson Nye, called "Bill" for short, first sprang into prominence as editor of the Laramie Boomerang. That name alone would indicate that whoever named it had a sense of humor, for what modern editor and publisher would want his paper to come back in boomerang style, promiscuously, perhaps marked "refused", or "wrong address", "not called for", or the many variations which indicate that an unpaid subscription balance is apt to remain unpaid.

Laramie is in Wyoming and in Bill Nye's time it was still a favorite after-dark pastime for cowboys to shoot up the town just to hear the bullets sing and the windows break.

x x

Also there was a Boot Hill Cemetery where folks were buried who spoke too fast and not too slow. And so, Bill's Boomerang had to be funny rather than caustic, and while it attained considerable popularity it never made any money, a failing many good newspapers have, reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

x

Bill's venture into journalism was young when by pull and perseverance he secured a position as editor of the Laramie City Sentinel, May 6, 1876, of which he spoke as follows:

"The opportunity to do reporting came to the surface and I improved it. The salary was not large; it was not impressive. It was not even worthy of the name. But by putting handles on it every Saturday evening I was able to carry it home by myself, the distance being short. I used it wisely, not running though it as some would have done. In this way at the end of the year I had two dollars in money and a nice new set of whiskers. I also had acquired a gun moreoal, whose views one could easily get by being thrown in its society for a few minutes on a warm day. This was the Sentinel morning paper. We printed it before sunset and distributed it before sunrise. Thus it had the appearance of extreme freshness and dampness. Old Jim Hayford owned the paper. He gave me twelve dollars a week to edit the paper —local, telegraph, selections, religious, sporting, fashion, political, and obituary. He said twelve dollars was too much, but if I would jerk the press occasionally and take care of his children he would try to stand it. Perhaps I might have been there yet if I hadn't had a red hot political campaign and measles among the children at the same time. You can't mix measles and politics. I collected my princely salary and quit, having acquired a style of fearless independent journalism which I still retain. I can write up things that never occurred with a masterly and graphic hand. Then, if they occur afterward, I am grateful; if not, I bow to the inevitable and smother my chagrin."

Then he started the Boomerang and although the venture was a failure financially, it launched Bill Nye on the sea of journalism as a humorist.

He died in February, 1896, aged 48, and his estate totalled more than a quarter of a million dollars.

Some Sidelight readers may remember the time when Bill Nye made a lecture tour of Canada. They will also remember that Bill was not a great success as a lecturer—his copy being better than his talkie, so to speak.

RULES WORTH FOLLOWING TO BRING SUCCESS

Striving Hard Does Not Mean Slavish Devotion to Ambition

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Although success is a relative term, there is no individual who does not strive for it. The business man measures success in terms of more sales, a larger plant and greater power. The professional man thinks of success as an increase of patients or clients, more renown and authority in his special field of endeavor.

The working man believes he has achieved success when his wages are increased, when the bank balance grows, when children and home she has succeeded when she has conserved the health and happiness of her growing children and has established an adequate home.

You will observe from this that the success of one individual does not differ from that of any other, so far as material values are concerned. That is true.

The fractional every person, success involves the accomplishment of something for which he is striving. And the secret of it is that if you strive hard enough, you can succeed.

Striving hard, however, does not mean slavish devotion to one ambition, to the total exclusion of all other interests. Broaden your interests if you would attain greater success in any special field. This is not theory. It is a well recognized basis on a physiological principle.

If you keep using one set of brain cells over and over again without rest you will without using other brain cells as a couple-balance, you invariably deplete your nervous energy and work your cells to exhaustion.

Persistence can and will win success, but only if that persistence crosses the line of special faculties without wearing them out. The brain and nervous system are the toughest structures we possess. Picture to yourself the terrific onslaughts that were made upon nervous systems during the last war.

No degree of success, we should remember, no achievement of whatever kind is worth a nervous breakdown. Many people break down when success is just in sight. They have thought only of success —never of building a solid foundation under it so that, when achieved, success might be lasting.

To achieve your desired goal and then break down amounts to failure, after all.

Consider the success you want and define it in your mind. Then work toward it from as many angles as possible.

And always build for permanency

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

No person should attempt to eat a meal hastily. It is far better to do without eating than to eat quickly. Meals should not only be eaten leisurely, but in as quiet an atmosphere as possible. Many cases of indigestion are produced by the fact that there is too much noise or too much animated conversation during the meal.

Do not fail to see the parade of the Belleville Amateur Minstrels tomorrow afternoon.

A number of county cross roads are three feet of snow yet to melt.

The ice in the river which has been threatening to move for the past few days made the first shove at about 9.30 this morning commencing at the upper bridge. In an incredible short time the effect of the shove was felt all along the river. The ice at all points yielded to the irresistible pressure from above and swept all before it. The damage to property commenced at the foot bridge. The guys supporting the bridge became entangled in the ice and the pressure was so great that they were broken. Remaining fast in the ice they were carried down stream and threatened the safety of the structure for some time. It bent like a serpent, but as soon as the strain was relieved it would swing violently back into position. At the rear of No. 1 fire shed the ice began to jam. The stone wall at the northwest corner of the Carmen property was torn out and the sheeting of a frame barn adjoining it on the north was also torn off and the joists. The pier sunk above the eastern butment of the lower bridge to afford protection until the ice was out but there was no apprehension for the safety of the property. The western wall of the stone warehouse in the rear of the building occupied by A. N. Reid was taken out by the jam. The shock to the building was so great that a portion of the southern wall also gave way and fell out. The foundation of the building of Jas. Cummins in the rear of his new buildings on Coleman street was badly damaged. At 10 o'clock the ice had become stationary and filled the river even from bank to bank. The water immediately began to rise and cellars were filled with water. Merchants who had not prepared for the flood were busy getting off goods in the cellars and considerable damage was done. At one o'clock the position of the ice was unchanged, but the flats on the west side of the footbridges were under water. Coleman street was quite impassable and the goods were carried from place to place in a boat. Cellars and stables along the bank of the river were found in many cases with their bottles floating about in the water. Everett street was covered with a foot of water and the flats at the corner of Bridge and Everett streets was afloat. Below the bridge on the west side of the river broke up and the force of the ice rose on the west bridge and the footway on the north side of the bridge was smashed and the iron railing at the side snapped like pipestems, but the danger appeared to be over. The bridge was safe for the time being, but the danger will not be over until the ice at the mouth of the river breaks up and the jam is allowed to pass out.

SAILORS WORSHIP AT CHERRY VALLEY

On Eve of Opening of Season on Lakes Divine Service is Held

Picton, April 15.—(Special)—The Little Church in Cherry Valley held more than seven hundred worshippers on Sunday evening for the first eighth "Mariners' service". Many more who sought to enter could not make their way into the crowded church. This service each Spring bids God-speed to the sailormen and fishermen who go out to reap a harvest from the lakes. Stirring epics of the seas are brought to mind again, and the tell call of the sailors who have made the trip port since the last service is read.

Crossed Oars

The decorations of the church, the hymns and vocal numbers were all suited to the occasion. Crossed oars decked the front of the pulpit, draped fish nets at the base of the altar; at one side, a model of a lighthouse, at the other a model of the "Iona" built at Trenton and sailed by Capt. Donaldson. On the walls were pictures and paintings of schooners, many other ship models placed around. Eight flags of captains attended the service.—Capt. G. Vanalstine of Trenton spoke for them all, paying tribute to Capt. Palmatier, the originator and moving spirit of these services each year, and with whom he had sailed for many years.

Fishermen And Families

Fishermen and sailors and their families were present from Point-Traverse, False Duck Island, the Indian Point, Picton and almost every pedestrian entry of Prince Edward at this service which gains in interest every year.

The service opened with an organ prelude by Mrs. Herb. Scott, invocation by the pastor, Rev. Hall. "Before Jehovah's Kingly Throne" Rev. P. F. Gardiner, pastor of the church, read Psalm 107. "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me" was sung, following which Mr. Gardiner gave an inspiring address from St. Matthew's Gospel, 14th chapter, twenty-seven, "But the men, wondered saying, what manner of man is this, for even the winds and the obey him". He referred to Christ sitting in the boat, this was the only possible when the disciples had faith. "We too must have confidence in Jesus Christ," he said. The speaker called for divine clemency on those who would go out on their voyage on the waters and those who would be left behind to await their return.

Six in Roll Call

Captain Nelson Palmatier, who for fifty years sailed the lakes without losing a ship or a member of the crew, and with whom the service originated, read the roll call of the dead. Six from Prince Edward County sailors and fishermen have passed on since the last Mariners' Service. They are Howard Werden, George Collier, Cortland Kent, Capt. John H. O'Regan, Lewis Selick Palmatier, Phillip Haskell.

Following the roll call, Captain Byron Bongard, another veteran mariner, placed a basket of flowers on the altar in memory of all sailors and fishermen who have entered the last list.

Musical numbers were in keeping with the program, and included a vocal duet by Miss Martha Palmatier and Mr. Lee R. Scott, quartette by Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Dow and Mr. and D. L. McLeod and Mr. H. Hunter. A vocal solo by Mr. M. V. Dow, and vocal duet by Mr. and Mrs. Dow. Stirring dramatic recitations were given by Miss Hazel Ward and Miss Elsie McConnell. Rev. Mr. Gardiner read a number of "Sailor Sayings" which had been prepared by Mrs. Edward Rorke, who was unable to be present owing to illness. This selection told of trips made by the schooners "Lizzie", "Deseronto" and the "Julia of Kingston" from the Bay of Quinte ports to Oswego. On one memorable trip, the schooners made Oswego, When they reached the harbour after a terrible crossing, one captain said, "God stilled the waters on this side or we wouldn't have made it."

Recalls Many Early Tragedies

Ex-Warden Amos MacDonald in a most interesting address, led the minds of the audience back through the years to think for a few moments of the history which has occurred to ships and men of the county.

"It is always a real pleasure for me to attend these, your Mariners' Memorial Services, and I think they are wonderful services," said Mr. MacDonald, "when we gather here for a little time to pay tribute to the memory of those men who in bygone days took charge of the trade and commerce of our Great Lakes,

"There are not many families represented here tonight," said Mr. MacDonald, "that have not lost friends and relatives on the Lakes. Two relatives of mine were lost, and their bodies never recovered. The speaker has spent many years of his life along the lakes and the memory is fresh in his mind of the mariners. For over twelve years he was at the lighthouse at Outer-ard, Point, and it was here that he came in contact with so many tragedies of the deep.

The Emerald

"It was while at Salmon Point that I found the foremost of the schooners "Emerald," related the speaker. "You all remember the story of that ill-fated vessel, the last large three-masted schooner to set out from Charlotte loaded with coal for Toronto. She left in a fine wind, and was passed en route by the steamer Glen Allen, which later reported that the vessel was, at that time, been travelling along excellently. But some time during the night the sea seems to have risen. What happened God alone knows. She was never heard from again with every member of the crew aboard. And it was the mast of this vessel which I later found. Reconstructing the tragedy, Mr. MacDonald stated that it was believed that the fore-gear of the Emerald had become carried away by a sudden gale, and vessel loaded to the decks with coal, had breached to in the trough of the sea and sank.

The speaker next referred to the crossing of the lake of the "Pacific" of Picton, designed and built at Roblin's Mills by John Tait, and owned and commanded by Captain Hewitt. This vessel made her first trip to the Motherland, loaded with bone meal, travelling coast-wise to the Gulf, before striking across the Atlantic. Capt. Hewitt and Mrs. Hewitt and her maiden voyage she made the trip across in nine days—a record for those days. But on her second trip to the Old Land, misfortune befell her off the coast of Scotland and she sank with all aboard.

"These things are sad, and sad for me to relate, but they are true and I think it fit that we should recall some of these noble men's experiences, when they gave their lives in the trade and commerce of our lakes. And I hope that when this generation has passed there may be some one who will recall them to our memory," suggested the speaker.

Tribute to Capt. Bongard

Here the speaker paid tribute to Captain Byron Bongard who had served on the sailing vessel Arazia for fourteen years, after serving on the Turbinia for another fourteen years. It was while the Captain was on the Arazia that the tragedy happened to the Bailie, recalled the speaker. The Bailie was a fishery ship owned and commanded by Captain Baird, and most of the family was aboard. Trying to make the Georgian Bay in a driving storm the vessel was driven ashore and totally wrecked. The sailors who were in the rigging and took up a large collection to help out the family.

Another sad fatality was that of the Belle Meriden another family ship, off Bald Point, when in the November gale she sank and all but one of the crew were drowned.

Lashed to Seat

The last tragedy of the lakes which the speaker recalled was that of Moses Dulmage, who one evening when a number of vessels were passing under the coast of Scotch Bay had rowed ashore in a small yawl boat to spend the evening with a friend. When he set out from the shore a fresh gale blew almost somewhat to the north, and the heavy yawl boat was awkward to handle to the windward. After terrible struggle to reach his own vessel he was forced to turn back and tried for two other vessels, but was still unable to make them, and was forced to put across Gull Bar, but able to make land here, he strove with might and main to reach safety on the Duck Islands but again missed. All hope evidently having left him, the painter and lashed his body securely to the seat, evidently wishing that his body be found. Think of that terrible struggle through two days and the darkness of night. When the body was found at Snowy Point, his hands were found to be nearly worn to the bone with the terrible struggle of the long sea.

That said the speaker was the most impressive scene, when Captain John Waters, took the body of the lad back to his own shores with his vessel the Seabird. Vessels of every kind formed a cortege about the Seabird as she bore the body home, and the white wings spread on either side of the Seabird by men were very suitable escort for the funeral boat.

"A Long Pull on Galilee"

"A Long Pull on Galilee", was the topic of an interesting address by Mr. Ernest Balder of the Belleville Telegram. It was the third appearance of Mr. Balder at this service as the guest speaker. In opening he paid a tribute to the fishermen. His life is one of the country's broadwinners. He ranks with the farmer afit the sailor in the van of those who are essential to the country's life.

"The sea and the oars reming me where I was seven years ago, at this time almost to the same evening, on the Bay of Quinte," the speaker recalled. "This sea is not large and broad as some parts of it, part of Lake Ontario north and east of Point Traverse. They have one thing in common, and that is they can both be rough pieces of water. One is dreaded as much like Today, instead of a region of ten cities, there is only one little town on the whole shore line of Tiberias. The country about Galilee, now empty, unfilled, deserted, formerly was the theatre of throbbing life in the days of the Son of Man. Great multitudes went out from the ten cities to hear Him. Cities and multitudes alike are dust, today the land is empty.

Palestine Hills

"On the east side of the lake, in bold and gaunt relief, mountains of the country of the gadarenes. Once it raised pork in great herds. Today, not a single unclean animal feeds on the hills of Palestine like Oriental rugs, they are stripped of all shows him, in the uniform of Admiral of the Fleet, as he acknowledged the cheers of the people of Belfast on the occasion of the opening of the Ulster parliament in 1921. It is significant that after every appearance the King made in Ireland dissension lessened for a time.

The Prince of Wales always showed the greatest respect for his father. In practically every speech he made on his long tours throughout the Empire, it was always the King who was the theme, while the Prince made himself, in effect, simply a mouthpiece, enough it is known beyond dispute that the Prince of Wales writes most of his own speeches.

And the Prince liked nothing better than to be in the company of his father. The picture at right taken in 1922, shows the King and his son and heir, walking at Buckingham Palace on their way to attend a chapel service.

The King in Ireland and with the Prince of Wales

ASIDE from the great war, one of the King's greatest worries was Ireland. Time and time again he sought to pacify that troubled people; he comprehensively advised his ministers and did everything in his powers, through personal appearance and through speeches to smooth the difficulties in the way of amicable relations between Ireland and the southern country.

Often the situation became so critical that the King risked his life by appearing in Irish cities.

But he scorned this personal danger—in fact, the more assurance he had that any danger existed, the more was he determined to deliberately flaunt it.

HE FELT MISERABLE AFTER MEALS

Acute Indigestion Relieved by Kruschen

The treatment which put this man right must surely be worth trying in every case of indigestion. Read what he says:—

"Two years ago I suffered very much from indigestion, loss of appetite, and a most severe pain in my back. Food soured in my stomach. I felt most miserable after meals, and had no desire or appetite for them. A friend advised me to try Kruschen Salts. I did so, and I am most happy to testify that after a short time I felt the greatest benefit. I continued taking Kruschen till I felt myself quite better and a new man. I feel as light-hearted as I did twenty years ago."—W. B.

What Kruschen did for him it will do for everybody else who suffers from indigestion as he did. The fact is that "the little daily dose" of Kruschen first stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion, and then ensures a complete, regular and unfailing elimination of all waste matter every day.

The proceeds of the evening amounted to $18.50.

Born at Wellman's, Rawdon on Friday, April 5th 1935 to Councillor and Mrs. Carl Clancy, gift of a son.

Mr. W. Sutherland vice president of Bethel, M.E.W.A. Young People's Society opened, with "true hearted whole hearted" and Mr. B. G. Truscott offered prayer.

Mrs. Harry Preston read a selection and Master Bobby Preston sang "Jesus Loves Me" "Little Shoes." A few numbers of community singing followed and Mrs. Ross Preston Sine read "The Careful Manager."

Mr. Wesley Preston gave the topic on the subject "What is Success and Why we Hate War."

Mrs. Ross Preston sang a solo entitled "Home" and Miss Annie Preston read a poem entitled "Women Why Women Should be Ordained."

Miss Irene Tucker and Mr. Eric Mrs. M. Hayden recited "Unawares."

Miss Ruth Preston read two interesting contests a "Romances by Molor car" and "Parts of the Body."

On Friday—a neighbor — Mr. Harry Brown.

Wandering Tom—a pathetic character—Mr. Lewis Bird.

Old Moe—a genuine Darkey — Mr. Henry Stevens.

The play opens in Summer with Mrs. Dayman the home of David Moore. The minister proposes to Elizabeth, Nell's past history is told Stirling, in the absence of her mother and the disappearance of her father. Elizabeth is a dear old maid and plants a ring in Nell's apron to make out she is a thief.

The second act is a Christmas scene at the same home when all the family gather in. Mrs. Dayman's niece Nell. John Ryder, however, believes in Nell and proposes. Susan Moore's daughter Mildred, is a storm during David Moore's absence.

Act III. is pictured as an old cabin in the woods, the home of Mother Moore, Nell, Tom, Judge flees there for refuge and the mystery comes to a head. Mother Thomas Osbourne regains his memory and proclaims himself as Nell's father.

The fourth act is the same Christmas scene at Moore's home. Nell is now an heiress and John Ryder hesitate to ask for her hand, however she asks him. All the misunderstandings are settled and Nell is united to her own.

The play was well given, every one having a fitting role or their part. Several local hits caused merriment while the story also told many sad and tragic moments.

LEAGUE ELECTS YEAR'S OFFICERS

C. W. L. Holds Annual Meeting in St. Michael's Academy

In St. Michael's Academy last evening, the annual meeting and election of officers of the Catholic Women's League took place, following the regular monthly meeting for April. Mrs. A. B. Collins, president, was in the chair for the earlier part of the meeting and presented the fourteenth annual report for Belleville sub-division.

Mrs. Collins, in her report, thanked the pastor and his assistants, the officers and members of the League for their co-operation during the past term, regretting that unavoidable absence from the city had made it impossible for her to participate in all activities of the League. She also expressed appreciation to the executive and members of other parochial societies for their generous assistance at all times. Mrs. P. J. Lee, first vice-president, was especially thanked by Mrs. Collins for her splendid work in taking charge during Mrs. Collins' absence.

Reports of the year's work were then presented by the following officers: Miss Lee, treasurer; Miss Mahoney, secretary outlined the program of the League for the past season and Mrs. J. F. Dolan, treasurer, presented the financial statement of the year.

Mrs. J. Lafferty, Travelers' Aid secretary and Mrs. J. Sullivan, convener of Migrating, were called upon for reports. Mrs. Leo Callahan, convener of Child Welfare, reported on meetings during the year and thanked all those who had assisted in the programs. Mrs. E. Brown, the League representative to the Victorian Order of Nurses' Committee gave the members an interesting account of the work of the Order.

Regret was expressed by the members at the absence of Mrs. J. Fitzpatrick, devoted officer of the League, who has been ill.

Miss M. Dolan took the chair for the election of officers. The following will take office for the ensuing year:

Honorary Chaplain—Rt. Rev. J. P. Nicholson, V.G.

Past President—Miss K. Dolan.

President—Mrs. A. B. Collins.

First Vice-President—Mrs. Leo Callaghan.

Representative to V.O.N. Committee—Mrs. E. Brown.

The members were honored in having present last evening, Rev. John Knox S.J., who was introduced by the pastor, Rt. Rev. J. P. Nicholson, V.G. Father Knox gave a very interesting and thoughtful address, speaking in high terms of the work of the Catholic Women's League and paying tribute to Miss Margaret Fletcher, foundress of the Catholic Women's League as a world-wide movement. Father Knox discussed various phases of League work and urged the members to keep spiritual values uppermost in all League undertakings. The appreciation of the members was expressed by Miss K. Dolan.

SOCIETIES

Kingston Road U. C. Association

The Women's Association of Kingston Road United Church held a social evening at the home of Mrs. A. H. Maguire, Herchimer Ave. The President of the Association, Mrs. J. Donaldson presided for the worship period. The meeting was opened by singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" and prayer by Rev. Farnsworth and all repeated in unison the 23rd psalm. The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted and roll call given. A few items of business were discussed and it was decided to have lantern slides in the church for the next meeting.

The program was then given. Accompaniments during the evening were rendered by Don Williams with Miss Lorna Ridley at the piano. Mr. Farnsworth made a few remarks congratulating the Association on their splendid work.

A reading "The Ladies' Aid" by Mrs. Melville Donaldson.

Solo "Wearyin For You". Lorna Ridley.

Music on Spanish Guitar, Don Sine.

This was followed by song from five girls — Audrey Nicolson, Mae Storey, Helen Lane, Evelyn and Laura Sine.

After the collection was taken up the same five girls and three boys Bobby Sine, Douglas Ketcheson and Wilbur Shorey gave an interesting dialogue concerning missionary work.

The meeting closed with Hymn 2, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" and dismissed after the Parish Benediction had been repeated.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

BOYS PASS UP LOVE AND PREFER CARS TO WIVES

Copyright, 1935

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Dad and I grew up in the same town; went to school together, and had a boy and girl engagement. His father was the leading upholsterer in the town, and was working into a very nice decorating business. But Bob wouldn't learn the trade. He said it was too slow, women were too fussy about matching things, he wouldn't be bothered about it.

We were engaged all right, then he went to the big city. His mother who adored him gave him a small substantial sum of money with which my fiance bought a car. The car was to help him get a job. He tried being a real estate salesman, but didn't anything that amounted to much. He tried soliciting insurance but this didn't go any better than the real estate.

"His mother has sent him money periodically, or I guess he would have fared pretty badly in a big city.

"He came home two weeks ago and wanted me to marry him, saying if he were married and settled he was sure things would go all right. I'm a pretty good stenographer, and I was to give up my job back home and take one in the big city until he got a worthwhile job.

"But Bob has been trying for this job for so long that I am losing faith in him, and though I loved him dearly I am afraid I've tired. I really feel it's unfair to myself to continue with this engagement. I hate to disappoint Bob's mother, who offers to help us out, but somehow I don't care for that type of marriage.

"Loretta."

It looks to me as if, should Loretta marry Bob, she will probably continue to be a stenographer in the big city, and her dreams of a home and children will never be fulfilled.

It would have been better if this young man's mother had not given him so much money when he went off to make his fortune. A little necessary rooting would have been more beneficient to a young man of his type — one who feels if the worst comes to the worst, he can always fall back to his doting mother.

Loretta's letter opens up a very interesting question discussed at a recent educational convention: Should a husband be one of the young men who used to learn substantial trades?

They didn't hesitate to serve apprenticeship, and became skilled workmen. But today the dream of every boy of 15 or 16 is to own a car. With this ambition as a goal, boys who formerly learned a good trade now become odd-job men.

The young man with a car is in demand for delivering goods from stores at a small fee. Ten cent's will land the average market basket at the door of an apartment house not far from the Cash and Carry. Other small hauling jobs are available. Jitneying children and adults from school and work may be depended upon, if the arrangement is daily. Sundays and holidays offer richer harvests for out-of-town trips. And so the ambitious young man decides to spend three or four years becoming a skilled workman.

And now it seems that your young men of this type must have cars, whether they have wives, or not.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Copyright 1935

HOUSE-WARMING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been married quite a few years and have never had my own home. I have always lived with my father-in-law. I am moving into my own home very soon, and my friends all want me to give a house-warming and as I don't really know what a house-warming is, I am asking your help.

Please give me all the details of a house-warming. Please tell me what is expected of the hostess and what is expected of the guests? Some of my friends tell me that the guests are expected to bring a gift for the home, and some say they aren't. Which is correct.

A housewarming is an informal party, usually given either at tea-time or as a buffet dinner or supper. And it is planned and conducted like any of these parties, except that it is called a "Housewarming. Very often it is given in the tea-hours—"four to seven o'clock—on Saturday or Sunday afternoon, so that there will be both men and women guests. And it is given, usually, by the host and hostess. If it is given at this time of day, simple tea-foods are appropriate. If it is given as a supper party, it is usually given as a buffet supper, very informally, and the guests help themselves to the usual buffet party foods.

Stone is the reason for it is to greet friends to the new home, the new home is "shown off", and must, therefore, be in spic-and-span order and with some flowers in vases here and there, to give the gala decorative touch that it should have. Sometimes friends do bring gifts for the new home, but just as often they don't. It must be, of course, entirely a matter of their own choice.

The invitations may be sent in one of the various number of ways. If you and your husband have a "Mr. and Mrs." visiting card, it is ideal to write the invitation on this, as you would a tea invitation. Like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wells Fray
Two Newhome Place
Housewarming
Sunday, May first
Four to seven

Or, if you prefer, you may write notes of invitation. Or the so-called "Informals", which are the double cards, may be used. Then the message of invitation is written inside, if the names are engraved on the front. Or plain informals may be used, and you may sign your name, but include, of course, your husband in the invitation. "Alfred and I hope that you and Tom will be able to come to our housewarming on Sunday, the first of May, at any time between four and seven"....and so forth.

TAILS OR TUX.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A and B are having a discussion as to formal and informal wear for men. A claims that a tuxedo is not formal for evening and says that a full dress suit is formal. B claims that a Tuxedo is formal. Should A be right, then what time should a Tuxedo be worn, or that is, for a formal dance to be given in the Spring?

W.

A is right. The tailcoat is formal evening wear. The dinner jacket (Tuxedo suit) is for informal evening.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"Babbitt"
Guy Kibbee, a Natural for this Famed Character from the Pen of Sinclair Lewis

"Babbitt," greatest of the Sinclair Lewis novels which brought to that distinguished author the honor of being the first American to win the Nobel prize in literature, is the feature attraction at the capitol Theatre Today.

Transferred to the screen with all its subtle humor, its philosophy, its dramatic situations and its irony, and given a remarkable cast headed by Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee the film version of "Babbitt" is expected to rival in popularity the book on which it is based.

Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee, who, as a team, made such an impression in "Big Hearted Herbert," are in the film's spotlighted leaders in real comedy characterizations. Each is cast in the role of star and Kibbee has been called the perfect Babbitt" and Miss MacMahon, for the famous columnist O. O. McIntyre.

Kibbee has the title role of Babbitt, a small town realtor whose success to his boast, is hopeful, boasting, gullible, inclined to run a little wild at conventions of the "Zebras," of which he is an official, he is taken for a ride by a blackmailing widow and runs to his wife, portrayed by Aline MacMahon, for help. He sets as well as a husband should, for Aline is able to see through his shams and commits no scolding, but heart behind the vanity that made Kibbee fall for the blackmailing widow and the romantic interest supplied by Claire Dodd, as Babbitt's son, and Nan Gray, portraying his fiance.

Comedy is represented in the roles of Minor Watson, as a husband who finally decides the nagging wife, Minna Gombell. Others in the unusually large cast are Maxine Doyle, Russell Hicks, Alan Hale, Berton Churchill, Harry Tyler, Arthur Aylesworth and Mary Treen.

Short Subjects
Those two favorite comedians, George Sydney and Charlie Murray are back again in a screamingly funny comedy "Back To Trade Roll", a clever Lonergan production "Buddy The Dentist", and "A Modern Cinderella" a musical reel which shows Jessie Mathews in lovely costumes made from the new fabric "Fabrikoid."

DuBarry Soup Plates today. Shows 2.30 - 7.15 - 9.15.

Tomorrow Only
"Diarsell"

Return Engagement Wed. Only
In the history of London theatres there are but few features that warrant a return engagement anywhere. Every film fan is familiar with the outstanding performances given by the celebrated Lonergan Artists, and this theatre has been besieged with hundreds of requests for a return of his greatest character delineation as "Diarsell" who symbolizes one of the most brilliant of English Statesmen.

In "Diarsell" George Arliss lives the part of this brilliant minister and portrays it in a manner that is inimitable way. You will thoroughly enjoy this great picture and we venture to say it will be the last opportunity you will ever have to witness this wonderful film.

See it Wednesday 3.05: 7.45 and 9.50 at the Capitol.

AT THE BELLE
"The Little Colonel"
Wee Shirley Co-stars with Lionel Barrymore in Popular Romance
That bundle of screen magic, five-year-old Shirley Temple, will soon be thrilling and delighting her army of Belleville and vicinity movie fans in a new picture. Reports from other cities indicate that in "The Little Colonel", Fox Film has given her an ideal vehicle for her acting, singing and dancing talents. It will come to the Belle Theatre, for three days, commencing Tomorrow (Wednesday), matinee daily.

She co-stars with Lionel Barrymore in this popular story of southern prejudices, adapted from Annie Fellows Johnston's series of "Little Colonel" stories, which were the favorite reading of millions a generation back, and whose appeal is perennial.

The Little Colonel", is the story of a Kentucky belle who marries a Yankee, against her father's wishes, and is promptly disowned by the proud old aristocrat. Shirley plays the cameo colonel whose dancing feet, smiling eyes, and honey-colored curls make a withering attack on the heart of the stern rebel.

In keeping with the importance of this picture, Technicolor graces part of this Dellyvia production. The real Shirley as she really looks is seen for the first time by her thousands of movie fans.

Critics in other cities where "The Little Colonel" is playing, hail it as Shirley's most superb vehicle. There is blended drama and comedy in the plantation, frontier, and army scenes. Attention is also called everywhere to Shirley's dancing with Bill Robinson in his original stair dance, elaborately staged in one sequence of the picture.

Supporting the co-stars are such personalities as Evelyn Venable, John Lodge, Sidney Blackmer, Alden Chase, William Burress and others.

An all-star cast of funmakers in "Chasing Through Europe" at the Belle Latest News Flashes, and Ben Pollack and His Merry Knights of Melody with a galaxy of radio entertainers will be exhibited on the same bill.

"Flirtation Walk" Departs
Dick Powell, charming Ruby Keeler and Pat O'Brien are appearing at the Belle Tonight for the last time in Warner Bros. musical romance "Flirtation Walk". The picture is a Frank Borzage production with dance ensembles by Bobby Connolly. The Belle Latest News Flash, Walt Disney Color Classic, and a novel screen adventure are exhibited on the same program.

Life as Success or Failure Is Theme of Father John Knox

Mission For Men And Boys Continues at St. Michael's

Last evening the Retreat for men continued under the direction of Rev. John Knox, S.J., in St. Michael's Church, the men and boys of the parish attending in full strength. The reverend missionary congratulated the men on the way in which they were making the retreat.

Th subject of his sermon last evening was "Success or Failure" and he contrasted success from the estimation of the world and success as God sees it. Failure in the eyes of the world sometimes means success in the eyes of God. God chooses the weak things of the world to confound the strong and the things that are not, to bring to nought the things that are. So flesh may glory in His sight, the preacher in his far reaching principle as enunciated by St. Paul. He illustrated this truth by describing the anointing of King David. The youngest not the oldest, the weakest not the strongest, the unlearned not the learned was chosen. "Look not", said God to the Prophet Samuel when his oldest son stood before him as candidate for the office, "upon his countenance or on the heighth of his stature for I have rejected him. I see in the things that appear but God sees the heart.

The preacher still further illustrated the principle by reading and explaining the parable given to us by our Divine Lord "Two shall buy the Lord thy God with all thy heart with all thy soul, with all thy strength and thy neighbour as thy self" and again "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and the widow and to keep yourself unspotted from the world."

Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was closely attended by Father Collins. Masses this morning at six, seven, eight and nine o'clock were well attended. At the closing of the men's Retreat tomorrow night there will be renewal of baptismal vows and the imparting of the Papal Benediction. On Holy Thursday and Good Friday evenings the church will be open to all men and women. The sermon on Holy Thursday will be on the Blessed Sacrament and on Good Friday evening on the Passion of Our Lord. The subject of-lo-night's sermon will be "The Starting Place of Life."

Shirley Temple in the irisistible costume she wears in—"The Little Colonel" where she co-stars with Lionel Barrymore, coming to the Belle tomorrow.

BURIED ALIVE AS EXPLOSION ROARS THRU WORKINGS

Relatives Gather

That it may have originated in a shot of explosive to loosen coal was one theory, that was apparently strengthened by the presence of a shot-firer, and the others with him in the 1,500-foot southeast level were:

Jack Clark, 50 married, of Stellarton.

Sandy Beaton, 55, married, Stellarton.

Alex Hennessey, 45, married, Stellarton.

Ignate Bournish, 43, single, Stellarton.

James McEachern, 30, married, New Glasgow.

Jack McEachern, 28 single, New Glasgow.

H. Flemming, 48, married, Stellarton.

The McEacherns are brothers.

Wives and relatives of the miners had been gathered since early morning and the pit mouth as soon as word of the explosion spread through the town. This afternoon they were joined by about the colliery yard, waiting anxiously for word from below.

What news trickled up carried little hope. Crews equipped with masks for work in gas and some "bare-faced" miners had gone down but they could find no trace of the buried men. They climbed over some of the falls material in narrow spaces between the roof but eventually struck an impassable heap.

As they dug fears doubled for the lives of the seven. If they were alive and on the other side of the cave-in miners above groping said, their air supply must be running short. The fall had cut off ventilation and death by suffocation in the dank air holes of those who might have escaped the explosion.

LATE MURNEY E. GEEN

The funeral of Murney E. Geen (Bert) took place Saturday afternoon from his late residence in the 5th. concession of Huntingdon, near Tweed. Rev. Mr. Bowman was interested by friends, who desired to pay their last tribute of respect to and to evince their sympathy with the family in their bereavement.

At the house a brief service was conducted by the Rev. F. G. Bestner after which a portion of the burial rites of the I. O. O. F. was performed by J. E. Bateman K. of R. and the Rev. H. B. Herrington, chaplain of Thomasburg Lodge under the auspices of which the funeral was conducted. At the conclusion of the service in the house the procession proceeded to Christ Church, Thomasburg, where the burial office of the Church of England was conducted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. C. H. Griffin, assisted by the Rev. F. A. Smith, rector of St. George's Church, Tyendinaga, and the Rev. A. Owen of Belleville. During the service Mr. Bert Housser sang a hymn "Safe in Port Square."

At the graveside in Thomasburg cemetery the committal service of the church was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Bestner, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Smith and the Rev. Mr. Geen. The last sad rites of the Foresters' Order were performed by Dr. S. R. Beatty, K. R. and Mr. Percy Holland as chaplain.

The bearers were Messrs. Albert Porter, Matt. Allen, Lorne Graham, Harvey Vance, Dr. Beatty and Dr. Wallace.

The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. The following boys were flower bearers: Alvin English, Harry Carlson, Clara Carter, Agnes Griffin, Lucinda Kennedy, Harry Sherry, Athol Dudgeon and Wallace McTaggart.

SEVERE BODY BURNS AFTER HEAVY EXPLOSION

Explosive May Have Been Secreted In Building

London, Ont., April 16—(CP)—Two men are in St. Joseph's Hospital suffering from severe body burns, while several windows were blown out and heavy damage done in a mysterious explosion today in the metal shop at the Hyatt Jumbo Roofing Plant.

Fire department officials and plant officials failed to find the explosive that have been secreted in the building in an attempt to blow up the plant.

Those in the hospital are Clair Dunlop and Lawrence Johnston. Both suffered severe burns to their face, arms and body when the explosion—a black powder—occurred in the room immediately after the explosion.

The Ottawa Spotlight

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

Ottawa, April 16—A three-fold program for creating employment was announced today by the federal government, part of it immediately, the other part after the Easter adjournment. It does appear to call for the following:

A $60,000,000 national housing scheme, the Ottawa government to supply $10,000,000, the mortgage and insurance companies those of the rest, with some contributions from provincial capital. Work of construction will be done by local contractors employing local and international housing board. This sum would construct about 17,000 houses and be spread over two years, thus taking care of perhaps 90,000 persons and a total income, meanwhile for a good many thousand people.

Then a guarantee of $15,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, part of it for years to enable the railways to purchase locally-needed rolling stock and similar equipment. This would create employment in an industry which has been hard hit for several years.

A new public works program, involving further work on the Trans-Canada highway, a million dollar expenditure for harbor dredging elimination, money for harbors and waterfronts and a fund for such public buildings as post offices.

Remedy Unemployment

Quite a rumpus was kicked up in the House over the mass-buying report. Premier Bennett is now seeking out to the press at interviews the details for the $2,000,000 reached by the publication in a Toronto paper of a $1,000 word summary of the commission. The Premier and Justice agreed that the act was most improper. One afternoon all the members of the commission rose in their seats and declared they were guilty; it so happened that Hon. H. H. Stevens was not in the House at the time. Finally the brief tempest blew over.

The summary which was published contained nothing very sensational, because it had been anticipated with a good deal of accuracy. Some of the major recommendations have already been indicated in the Ottawa press, the national trade and industry commission, a fishery board, a livestock board, a branch of the labor department to deal with social problems, greater stringency in company inspection, a 44 hour basic week, with flexible clauses for special circumstances, the abolition of certain quantity discounts, the cessation of a number of unprofitable capital. A new species of cattle—such are the highlights of the report.

How many of these will be incorporated in legislation waits to be seen. The commission recommends only; the government may implement or not. Even if it chooses, may ignore them all and set up its own remedies. But it is likely that most of the labor end of the report will be heeded.

The Need For Drought Area

The bill to assist the drought areas of the west was passed through the House. It provided $750,000 in the present year and up $1,000,000 in each of the subsequent four years for experimental and demonstration work in the drifting and drought areas.

The Minister of Agriculture explained that the legislation contained provision for co-operation with the farmers in those areas. A good deal of attention will be given to the development of grass seeds, grain varieties suitable for the drought area. One major objective will be the development of a hardy drought resistant grass which will grow in the heart of the drought area and stop the drifting of soil resulting.

Michael Luchkovich, only Ukrainian member of the House introduced a bill which would make it an offence to defame persons of different religion or creed or race or religion. Continuing his drive for lower interest rates, George Coote, U.F.A. Medicel, succeeded in getting through the House a bill empowering committees an amendment to the interest act which would make it illegal for any mortgage holder to collect more than six per cent interest. Before it can take effect by the House, the Senate and the Courts. It is generally conceded that the object is a laudable one.

Laura Ingalls Out for Record Across Continent

Los Angeles, April 16—(AP)—Laura Ingalls roared away from the Union Air Terminal early today in her black "mystery" plane in an attempt to shatter Amelia Earhart's transcontinental speed record.

Hoping to span the continent in 16 hours or less, the 120 pound aviatrix "gave the gun" to her new $40,000 low wing monoplane as it began its 2,447 mile non-stop dash to Floyd Bennett field at New York.

The time of her takeoff was 5.10 a. m. (8.10 a. m. E. S. T.) She carried a Thermos containing of coffee, some buttermilk and sandwiches. Her projected route was via Albuquerque, N. M., Kansas City, Cleveland and New York.

From here into the middlewest she had good weather conditions and beyond the skies were reported clearing.

"I hope to make it in about 15 hours," she said before leaving.

The record she seeks to break, set by Miss Earhart in August, 1932, is 17 hours 7 minutes 30 seconds.

Second Tooth Of Yvonne of Quintuplet Fame

Callander, Ont., April 16.—(CP)—Baby Yvonne was in a class by herself among the Dionne quintuplets for she had a second tooth while two of her little sisters have one each and the other two babies have none.

When the nurses today examined the five sisters, now ten months and 18 days old, another lower central incisor was seen peeking through Yvonne's gums on the right side.

Yvonne was the second of the babies to produce her first tooth. She followed Annette and Little Marie, tiniest of the infants, was third in order. Cecile and Emilie are still toothless. As on all previous occasions, the nine babies caused some excitement among the hospital staff but it failed to retard the progress of the babies, who all registered increases in weight.

No visitors were admitted to the hospital grounds over the week-end on orders of Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, medical guardian of the babies. The resting road from Callander to the lonely outpost is in bad condition, and the drizzling rain, which fell today made travel on it treacherous.

THE LOVE FLIGHT

by Jeanne Dixon

CHAPTER TWO

In her room, Anne started packing. Not in the careless fashion that was to vent, for she was empty drawers. Emptying closets. Stowing things in trunk and bag. She was almost gay. She forgot her slender purse. She disdained the conduct of her fair weather friends who turned cool shoulders on misfortune. She was not going abroad—to Vichy, but she was going to see—in a ship of adventure, and she would be the captain, the pilot and the crew.

Packing trunks was a comparatively simple task. Nothing remained of the fulsome days of the Austin fortune except her clothes. Even her wardrobe had been reduced to fit a scale of necessity. Everything—home, paintings, furnishings, bric-a-brac had gone the last fascinating pot for the benefit of her father's creditors. Anne had been tempted to hold out a rug, which was priceless before bread lines formed in streets that once had been before had spewed golden streams. The rug was the gift of a pasha during a visit of her father to Egypt. She was glad now she had resisted the temptation to keep the rug as a souvenir of happier days. It would alienate, and she must escape high. She had been unable to resist a string of pearls that had been her mothers. Relatively the pearls were of small intrinsic value, but dear in sentiment.

Midnight. Anne finished packing, closed her last trunk, slipped into her pajamas and stand at the window for a final long look at the Aladdin city of her youth.

A scuffling outside her door, in the hall. Voices carried now and then, muffled. The thud of a body. She must do what she could to help. A dressing gown over her shoulders. Open the door ever so little—

"Stay where you are please'" a voice commanded. "This fellow is dangerous. We've got him, but we don't want him to cut loose again."

Anne drew back, apprehending a officer so that she could address him in confidence.

"I have very little money left," she said, seeking his hand and thrusting into it some crumpled bills. "I want you to see that this man or his family get what I've given you—half of what I have, I'd give more but I'm going away to look for a job and I'll have to have money for food and for railroad fare. And thanks so much for your trouble." Swiftly she turned and closed the door of her room behind her.

"Well, whadda you think of that?" the officer in charge asked his partner. "Half of all she's got! I'll be blessed if the wimmin ain't got more nerve than the men in this here depression."

Anne dressed and sat by the window awaiting the dawn. Would the dark skies ever turn to pearl and wear their rosy flush again? It seemed not. Hours stretched into infinity. She would take the first train south in the morning.

The girl on the bench to the right of Anne Austin moved up a peg. Anne pegged one after her. That meant only two applicants would be interviewed before she. Anne, would be on the carpet—the woman who had just stepped forward to the desk and sat to the right of her.

Was this really an employment agency, or was it a place she had read about, which had now materialized in her dreams? Palm Beach? She had been in Palm Beach many times—the hotels, the Austins, the Pembrokes, the Bradens graced, the clubs, cabanas, the Silvre Drive. Why was she here, in this strange place, with these strange persons?

Anne closed her eyes, opened them again. Palm Beach. She was here to get a job. She had to get a job or go on being hungry. One thin dime in her bag with the splashy silver monogram on it, and after she had a roll and a cup of coffee for consideration, breakfast and lunch even the thin dime would vanish. She couldn't buy food with a silver monogram.

"Next!"

The girl to the left of Anne nudged and murmured an impatient "You're next."

Anne rose, stood before the desk with uplifted chin. She hoped the desk was high enough so that the wasp-woman behind it could not notice the gaping at the knees.

"Name please." The wasp-woman poised a pencil over a paper.

"Anne."

"Full name please."

"Anne Austin."

"B-r-e-n-t?"

"Yes. B-r-e-n-t."

Why had she said Anne Brent? Anne, yes. She could understand that. But Brent. No one in her family, no one she knew, had been a Brent. Never that she could recall had she heard the name Brent. It just popped out at her. Brent. So be it.

"Occupation?"

Occupation? What had she done? What could she do? Anything as long as it was something. The pencil was still poised.

"I'm not occupied at the present."

The wasp-woman moved back in her chair, turned a stabling eye on Anne.

"I suspected as much." she said. Something in the manner of the girl standing so straight and still before her jarred the woman out of her routine. Her eyes fell to the silver monogram on the expensive black suede purse, to the hand that held the purse, slender and soft and white. She shook her head, pressed her thin lips to a straighter line. Another! The poor rich. Would there never be an end to them? Useless timber, clogging the machinery of life. They were not different.

Not uppity like most of them. Kind of. She looking and drawn. Hungry maybe.

"Any references?" she asked, lowering her voice so the others waiting outside the rail could not hear. "I'm afraid I haven't, ma'am," Anne apologized.

"Ever been in service before?"

"You mean have I ever worked before? No—not that I've never worked for wages."

I see." Pencil tapping on the desk. "Any idea what type job you might do?"

"I'm willing to do anything—I've graduated from finishing school and I've played the piano, concert music, for charity—"

The pencil went on tapping.

"Nothing secretarial?"

"Only college courses in typing—four to the dozen right now—and piano players make fair dish-washers when we can find dishes for them to wash."

"I know," Anne, despairing. She must not allow her chin to quiver. Lack of nourishing food weakened the will. "I hoped there might be something—if you're ready to admit inexperience with hard work—"

She was unduly pleased, the shell of the wasp-woman softened to the extent that she consulted a sheet of notes on her desktop.

"Here's one that might do," she said studying Anne over her spectacles.

"A client wants a lady-in-waiting to assist her every morning. The applicant must be clever about clothes—that is she must be able to advise about clothes and must care about the wearing of them. Also she must have enough of an education to keep track of what will be talked about in the news, books, the theatre, society—and pass it along to the client. Also she should be handy with the needle. Do you see, Brent?"

Anne looked puzzled. Brent? Why was Brent. Oh yes, she was Brent. "I believe I could manage," she said eagerly. "I've done my own and a few of my own clothes lately."

The wages are fifteen dollars a month and keep, uniforms furnished. The client will not pay more.

"Stay where you are, please," a voice commanded. "This fellow is dangerous. We've got him, but we don't want him to cut loose again."

man in charge. "I am Anne Austin. This poor fellow has come in search of my father, Edward Austin. Father is not here. He—there was an accident—father is dead. This man must have bought bonds and he thinks father took his money. He didn't of course. It was swept away, but, like millions and millions more."

"Too bad, miss." The officer was respectful, sympathetic. "Plenty of 'em's gone that way, and more going every day. The crazy house is full of 'em. We'll look out for the poor beggar, and no cause for you to worry."

"Will you wait a minute, please?" Anne retired into her room. At once she was back, approaching the officer so that she could address him in confidence.

"I have very little money left," she said, seeking his hand and thrusting into it some crumpled bills. "I want you to see that this man or his family get what I've given you—half of what I have, I'd give more but I'm going away to look for a job and I'll have to have money for food and for railroad fare. If you think you can make out—"

"Oh, indeed I can!" Forty dollars, maybe. I'll have an agreement and I'm almost—that is there is no one to consult but—"

"Then I'll hire you." Immediately the woman was sorry the words had slipped. She could see the girl wince. Loneliness made them that way sometimes. Like hurt rabbits. "I'll see that Miss Brent is placed."

Anne sat at the desk. Phoenix Employment Agency, Palm Beach, Fla.

Name of applicant—Anne Brent.

Color—White.

Age—21.

Against the spaces about your qualifications and your references blank." The woman told Anne. "I'll fill them in myself. The name of your employer is Hosg. Mrs. Josiah Hosg. I warn you she is difficult. I hope you have a good disposition and can keep your temper. Make a friend of her if you can and go along at first. She wants advice she doesn't want it. "Oh thank you. Thanks so much. I can't tell you how grateful I am for the chance."

The wasp-woman adjusted her spectacles, and the girl saw that their thin straight line again. She was completely dismissed out of the bench, sorting the sheets from the bags.

The fee will be ten per cent payable from your first month's salary." Anne heard her and let me know how you make out."

CHAPTER THREE

Half an hour later the desk of the Phoenix Employment Agency opened to admit a female person, who, judging by the width of his shoulders by his height and the breadth of his feet, Leigh, must have laid aside a football uniform to don a fashionable garb. Anne was startled that his eyes should find her the moment he was inside the door, and that he should stand on her with no attempt to conceal their wondering or their frank admiration. Blue eyes fastened upon her especially when they were frank and brimmed with boldness.

"You are the chauffeur from Mrs. Adolph Hosg?" The woman had taken a long look at the man in his fashionable blue uniform with scarlet and gold trimmings to attention.

"Yes, Madame."

"You are to drive this young woman," indicating Anne, "to the Hosg residence."

"Yes, Madame."

Anne rose and walked stiffly to the door conscious of the unblinking eyes of the young man in the amazing uniform. She could feel him touch his fingers to the visor of his cap as she passed.

The car to which the chauffeur showed Anne was no less amazing than the driver. Fleetson blue, too much scarlet and sizable gold trimmings. Anne, in the rear door.

"Don't be frightened Miss—I—I'll not hurt your name—"

"Miss Brent, Miss Anne Brent."

"Don't be frightened, Miss Brent, it looks worse than it is."

"I don't think I quite understand" Anne said bewildered. "It's really quite respectable a car I don't think it can do a hundred without even trying."

"I hope you're not giving me a compliment, Miss Brent—"

"Only on the open stretches. My name is Carl Case. I'm not a limo tamer and I don't perform on the flying trapeze, as you might be led to believe by the costume I wear. I'm just a plain or garden variety of automobile mechanic."

The uniform is rather go—she almost said gaudy. She substituted "smart."

"Gorgeous is scarcely the word. I believe I could drive faster. At times I get pretty bitter about it. Always dressed up and not cruise up and put one under arrest for driving without a license."

Anne laughed. And realized it was the first time she had laughed, spontaneously, in two months. Here she was standing in the street, talking with a chauffeur as though she'd known him all her life. A chauffeur! Well, why not? The chauffeur was the lady's maid in double combination. She liked the way the man combed his hair when he removed his cap to hand her into the car. And his smile was as good as a tonic.

"You're going into service with Madame Hosg?" he asked when the car poured into speed.

Anne leaned forward.

"Why—yes. I'm—that is— I've been engaged as lady's maid. I'm to assist Madame with her clothes."

Was she mistaken or did the broad shoulders of Carl Case shake with laughter? She sat very straight addressed him in her haughtiest tones.

"Is there anything humorous about being lady's maid to Madame Hosg?"

Carl Case ignored the chill.

"My dear Miss Brent," he chuckled, "you have no idea. One continuous gale of laughter. You think my duties in add—let us say a bit on the homely note. Wait until you see yours". The shoulders were shaking again. Anne was on the point to box Carl Case's ear with a handy bag. She had better practice restraint. She'd have to. Wait until she met the friendliness of this young man was contagious.

The car swerved, swept between two towering pillars, along a shell drive banked with flowering shrubs. It was proceeding slowly now, scarce moving. At the far end of the curved drive she could see long low arches, serrated walls, balconies. She thought her eyes might be playing tricks. The ensemble of medieval and modern architecture was the exact color of the car, of the chauffeur's uniform.

"You are mistaken, Miss Brent," Carl Case was saying. "This is not the State House. Nor the Museum of Un-natural History. It is Bois Joli, the winter home of Mr. and Madame Hosg."

"Bois Joli?" Anne said, incredulous. "But —there are no trees."

"Trees? Trees? Quite right. Bois —trees. We'd overlooked that. But we have some very fine cape jasmine, oleanders pedentals, specially imported from their native haunts. And in our hothouse are not less than twenty-four varieties of orchid, each wearing a medal around its neck."

"It's—fantastic," Anne breathed.

"Exactly. Fantastic without—and frantic within. You've merely glimpsed the shell of this monument—Bois Joli. One must enter the Bois, explore it, really to appreciate it."

Anne thinking: Carl Case knows French. And for a chauffeur he has an unusual command of English.

They were drawing up at one side of the blue pile, well toward the

"The servants' entrance, Miss Brent," Carl Case said, "If you like, I will show you in and find a maid to take you to Madame. It would be possible to lose oneself in the Bois, wander about for weeks and perhaps starve to death unless one were fortunate enough to stumble onto a servant who would guide one back to civilization."

Wolverines Scrape Out Win Over Port Arthur Bearcats In First Game for Allan Cup

Score 3-2 But Bearcats Looked Real Good in Defeat

WESTERNERS FAST

Halifax Slowed up by Bumps Taken in The Montreal Series

By GEORGE C. MURRAY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Halifax, April 16—(CP)— There were few pats on the back for Halifax Wolverines today although they had scraped up a 3-2 win over Port Arthur Bearcats in the first game of the Allan Cup finals.

They were told the plucky young western champions would turn the tables on them in the second encounter Wednesday night unless they stirred up some of the fighting spirit that routed Montreal Royals in the semi-finals.

Too old and slow to suffer the over confidence which seemed to be affecting his mates, veteran Wind Ferguson, Calgary star defenceman when the Wolverine defencemen failed to check Jack Hagarty, Arnold Deacon and Gus Sazberg, declared starting Thursday.

The slippery westerners just couldn't be checked as they wiggled in on Lloyd Archer time after everything but the net a few times. Archer was lucky three times from out of the Halifax territory and kept the play at the other end of the ice scored the winner at the game.

The other Bearcat line—Alex Sinclair, Bill Thompson and Milton Byday—found the Wolverines just as elusive as they were in the semi-finals. Sinclair carried the puck in for Port Arthur's second counter early in the middle session. He slipped it back to Thompson, who shot it between Graham and Lexington into the corner of the net.

The Wolves, back some of their long lunge with Montreal Royals, Captain Ernie Goodyear's injured knee him out of the game, Frankie Lavigne covered a long rap with a borrowed helmet, Bill Graham, came to the game from a hospital bed where he has spent the weekend to recover from a heavy cold.

By JIMMY FOLEY
Coach Italian Olympic Hockey Team

Halifax, April 16—(CP)— The Allan Cup is going to stay in the Maritimes for another year, I am convinced of that today after watching Halifax Wolverines romp through Port Arthur Bearcats without much effort in the first game of the series last night.

That doesn't mean I'm disparaging the western combination. Not the old story of a team of seasoned, hardened veterans up against a young and inexperienced outfit giving away plenty of weight. The Bearcats seem to have too much for them in experience, weight and class.

There was no indication of an inferiority complex, though, in the way those westerners carried the play in. Right from the start they took the aggressive, kept a five-forward drive, and all through the 60 minutes it was there wide-open offensive tactics that really made it a game.

Wolves knew they were going to win; you could see that. They were confident—almost too over-confident—and they went coolly and methodically about the business of getting goals with title of a hard, brushing play, that marked their series with the Montreal Royals.

In the last 10 minutes particularly, it seemed to me only poor luck kept the westerners from tying up the game. They were all over the Halifaxers and they did everything with the puck but get it home.

To me, young Jackie Nash, their scaler, stood out for the Bearcats. Fisher was equally good for the Nova Scotia nets, and I liked Vince Perusso and Chummie Lawless on defence my particularly for his fine backchecking.

GRADS TO PLAY WINDSOR

Edmonton, April 16.—(CP)— Edmonton Commercial Grads, out in search of another Dominion title, were ready for today for the Windsor, Ont., to clash with Windsor-Walkerville Alumni in the Canadian women's basketball championship.

Grads annexed the western championship last night by handing Vancouver Province British Columbia titlists their second defeat in two-out-of-three games. After winning the first game 63-24, Grads took the second 64-43.

OLYMPICS RULE MINOR HOCKEY

Defeat Vancouver in Rubber Game of The Series 4-3

Vancouver, April 16 (CP)— Detroit Olympics today ruled the minor hockey circuits as a result of defeating Vancouver Lions of the Northwestern League three games to two in the "Little World Series" concluded here last night.

Wally Kilrea's sizzling shot from the corner gave the International league team a 4-3 overtime victory over Lions in the fifth and deciding game of the series last night.

Lions won the first game 5-1 and also took the fourth game 4-3. Olympics won the second game 4-1 but lost the third 5-3 in overtime and then won the rubber game by the one-goal margin.

Kilrea's deciding counter came after just under six minutes of the extra session had been played. On a final but futile gesture Guy Patrick pulled off his goalie and sent six forwards on the ice in an effort to knot the count again, but for the two minutes before the final bell Normie Smith in the Olympics net was unbeatable.

Lions started off impressively, flashing in three goals in the first period but the Olympics reversed the procedure in the middle session to count a like number and tie the score. The third period was scoreless.

Clint Smith counted two of Lions goals, taking a pass from Bobby Kirr for the first and scoring unassisted before the end of the initial session after Gordon McFarlane sandwiched in a goal on an assist from Tip O'Neill.

Olympics started the pressure in the second frame to duplicate Vancouver's opening score, Bun Tommy Anderson and Dessie Roche teamed up to beat the Vancouver defense, then slid the disc to Conny Kling who whipped in Olympics' first real mid-period. Tip Poster and Ron Moffatt combined for the second a minute later with Poster taking the pass. Williams ended the tieing marker three minutes later on a double assist from Orville Roulston and Dessie Roche.

Play Ball .....

(By William Werkes)

Chicago, April 16 (AP)—The boys of supplying the answers to a set of American League question marks starts today.

The youngest of the two Major Leagues comes up to the beginning of the 36th championship campaign with two abandoning questions confronting Mickey Cochrane's Detroit Tigers repeat and who will step in the shoes of one of the men who made the home run famous and mighty Babe Ruth.

Cochrane apparently believes his club can field the pack home, his figures his pitchers are capable of accounting for 100 victories.

The second question, however, figure Cleveland on the verge of victorious for several seasons of Joe McCarthy's New York Yankees, or both, may head Detroit off.

The successor to the great Ruth as the magnet to attract steady streams of trade dollar turnstiles, may turn up in durable Lou Gehrig, overshadowed as long as Ruth was in the game, except Jimmy Foxx, whose success or lack of it, is a matter after a brilliant career at first base, figures to be the make or break point in the Athletics' bid.

To further heighten the fans' interest is the case of Joe Cronin and Bucky Harris. Harris, first of Clark Griffith's "one wonder" managers at Washington, is back at the Senators' helm, after stops at Detroit and Boston. In his place at Boston is Cronin, second of Griffith's prodigies, coaxed to the Red Sox by Tom Yawkey's big bankroll in one of baseball's biggest deals.

About 100,000 are expected to view the games today.

NATIONAL LEAGUE
(By Herbert W. Barker)

New York, April 16—(AP)—A long, hard winter grudgingly gave way to Spring and the National League's 1935 baseball season today.

Despite threats of cold weather, fully 125,000 fans, bundled up for heavy overcoats, were ready to offer a rousing welcome to the game, which expects to make a decisive comeback, financially and artistically, this year.

Expert calculations point to a two-club pennant race between the world-champion St. Louis Cardinals and New York Giants but managers of the other six outfits concede nothing in advance. Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh Pirates, whose winter trade sent Guy Bush, Jim Weaver and Babe Herman to Pittsburgh and Larry French and Freddie Lindstrom to Chicago, loom as dangerous rivals for the favorites.

The league offered a sure-fire box office natural at Boston where Rabbit Maranville, the setting for Babe Ruth's National League debut after 22 spectacular years in the rival Major loop. The renewal of Ruth's personal duel with Carl Hubbell, Giants' southpaw of New York Giants, brought prospects of a crowd of 35,000.

The other inaugurals—at Chicago between the Cubs and the Cardinals; at Cincinnati between the Reds and the Pirates; and at Philadelphia between the Phillies and the Brooklyn Dodgers—offered feature of their own.

Cardinals, picking Jerome (Dizzy) Dean to pitch the opening game, made their bid for another pennant with virtually the same cast which won the flag in 1934. Terry Moore, in the outfield, is the only newcomer.

Daily Short Story

"Reverse English"

(Copyright, 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

"Give him the air," Lindsey thought he heard someone say. The voice sounded distant, like the vague rumble of thunder on a sultry Summer afternoon. But it wasn't a Summer afternoon, it was an early Spring morning. And there was Lindsey, sprawled in a swoon on the cold marble flooring of the Municipal Building corridor. Curious had clustered around his prostrate form; in every conference everyone starting hopefully at Lindsey's fluttering eyelids. The air was charged with suggestions, each punctuated to revive the patient in a jiffy.

But all this is ahead of the story. Let us cut back, as they do in the movies, to the events immediately preceding this revival meeting.

Lindsey was young, good-looking, ambitious. He lacked only one thing, a name, a good name. There are lots of people who have Lindsey for a first name, he told me one day, but that last name — Lindsey! His full name was Lindsey St. Gabriel Rochester.

I hate to take credit for it, but it was I who persuaded him to use merely the Lindsey and Gabriel in a single string to form the name now so familiar to readers of light fiction. In the old days before Lindsey St. Gabriel Rochester signed to one of his pieces of frothy romance caused nothing short of ridiculous panic in the publishing houses. And, strangely enough, as soon as he switched to Lindsey Gabriel he sold his first big story!

We all enjoyed the success hugely, but well paid—little ladies who write fashion copy for one of the town's leading mode shops! You're perhaps never heard of me in print unless you've noticed it linked with Lindsay Gabriel's in Broadway gossip columns.

Well, they first met last Fall. I don't think I've had a chance for a few minutes' quiet talk with Lindsey since that eventful introduction. Each time I met him he would always be on his way to meet Iris on his way to 'phone Iris, on his way to buy theatre tickets, on his way to buy flowers for Lindsey, or was it Iris? I was all confused.

So it came as practically no surprise at all when he told me in one of those hurried chats that he and Iris he was on his way to telegraph his folks in California that he was going to marry a girl named Iris Arden. I didn't offer my congratulations, feeling that such unnecessary and inadequate gesture.

Now we'll fade back to the opening scene. The setting, as already recorded, is a corridor in the Municipal Building more specifically the corridor fringing the Marriage License Bureau on the second floor. It is five minutes preceding Lindsey's famous swoon.

Our friend filled out his application for a license, and it came Iris's turn to sign this detailed form. She took the pen, turned nervously, and said:

"Lindsey, I think there's something you ought to know. I've a confession to make, something I've never had the courage to tell you before."

He Clocks

Lindsey's jaw dropped perceptibly. He tried to speak, but his lips just opposed and shut with a mechanically hollow "clunk." Lindsey, it might be said, looked like a suffer-fish with the heaves.

"I know you'll hate me for this, Lindsey, but somehow it has always been my secret shame. You understand how it is when a girl comes here to make her way in the advertising profession. Glamor seems to be the keynote of the entire business even to a person's name. Well, When I came to New York, I decided I would have the most glamorous name in all advertising, so I stole the name of Iris Arden. That is not my real name. The name given me in christening 26 years ago, the name of which I am so mortally ashamed is—"

Lindsey tried to speak again. "Chuck" went his lips. He would have fallen in his tracks right then and there, but fearing the worst he started to run before he could hear the real name. His legs wobbled him as far as the door; with his last vestige of strength he twirled the knob, his legs buckled. He stumbled and crumpled in a faint on the floor outside.

I must hasten to add, however, that records show a Mr. Lindsey St. Gabriel Rochester took a Miss Linda Gabrielle Rochester as his lawfully wedded wife after the bandages could be removed from his head. These Municipal Building floors are cold—and very hard.

Little Benny's Note Book

Some lady came to see me this afternoon with a little girl named Bobbers, being a little girl with round blue eyes and a round red face, and I was just trying to sneak out through the front hall and ma called me in, saying, Benny, here's a nice little girl that's come to see you, now take her and show your room.

Ma thinking, Heck, good nite, me on the back, and the little girl's mother said, Now Bobbers I want you to play nicely because I'm a member, at the first sound of noise or disagreement you'll have to come right down again.

Yes mamma dear, Bobbers said, and me and her went up to the living room and she said, Let's play house and tawk about cooking recipes and putting the babies to bed and things like that.

I'm back, whatta you think I am, a sissy? I said. And I could hear the fellows yelling, and arguying which is the sweet and which is sour, O. If I can make her sound mad her mother will make her go down and I can go out with the fellows and I said, House, good nite house, that's the dumbest idea! I ever heard. I bet you're so dum you have a sister rite here and from your left ear, I said.

That's nix, I am dum, Bobbers said. The other day I went to the store for eggs and brawt back butter, hee hee I was only funny, wasn't that dum? she said, and I said, And what's more you're funny looking, you're one of the funniest looking little ginks of girls I ever saw.

I knew I Bobbers said. But you're not, you're awful cute looking, you just remind me exackly of little Leavence Little in the movies. she said, and I said, What, that darn sissy, you're crazy. And I started to tell her she was even dummer than I thawt she was, and she called upstairs, Benny the idear of addressing your little visiter in such a voice, Bobbers deer, come down you poor little thing and Benny I want you to go rite up to your room and stay there.

Which I did still mad.

Pat held in her hand the Ranee's gift. One was a slender jeweled dagger—the other, a curious, carved ring set with precious stones. As the Maharajah's wife placed the ring upon Pat's finger, she explained, The ring had a cunningly contrived, secret spring. "See, beneath this ruby," she whispered, "the tiny needle. It is dipped in the triple distilled poison of the deadly cobra. The merest scratch means death!" "But perhaps you prefer the dagger? I leave the choice to you!" She moved toward the door, then added: "No white woman shall ever take my lord from me!" She was gone, leaving Pat too astonished to utter a sound. Despite herself, Pat was alarmed at the uncertainty of the night's weird events. She looked at the flashing rubies and emeralds of the ring, hid the dagger within her bosom, turned from the door, and fainted.

Letters to the Editor

"Belleville, Ont.

"To the Editor of Ontario Intelligencer:—

"Dear Sir:—

"Every once in a while some one comes along with a suggestion to hand over the C.N.R. to the C.P.R. and give it control for fifteen years and give the C.P.R. Railway. I think that is the most absurd proposition I have ever heard of. And now to suggest to hand the C.N.R. over to him so that he can put our rail-way on its feet. At the present time he is giving prizes to the employees for the best suggestion for getting business for the C.P.R. At one time Mr. Thornton tried a scheme somewhat similar and was made to stop as it was suited to be unfair competition; but now they let Mr. Beatty work the same scheme without any interference. Not long ago a C.P.R. shareholder told me that the C.P.R. was gaining in connection with the operation of the pool trains.

"I know of one instance many years ago when the Government allowed the owner of a small railway to collect two-thirds of the freight for his 300 miles of road and handed it over to the Intercolonial Railway and they got the other one-thirds for their 1300 miles on the coast.

"I think all will agree that Mr. Beatty is getting paid for working for the shareholders of the C.N.R. and not for the interests of the C.N.R.

"It is just recently that Captain W. C. Jones told us that the unification of the two railways would solve the problem; he said that the C.N.R. had been set up in competition to the privately-owned C.P.R. Now, if I understand it correctly private roads could not compete with the C.P.R. and we had to take them over and operate them; but Captain Innis says that the C.P.R. will be bankrupt as it cannot compete with the C.N.R. When the private roads could not compete with the C.P.R. I did not hear them make any complaint but because the shoe is on the other foot, they are commencing to squeal. If one or the other is to be bankrupt which one would affect the Canadian taxpayer most? I say, what everyone should know, it is up to the C.P.R. to throw up the sponge if they cannot compete with on the same as merchants do when chain stores make it too hot for them. Thousands of small merchants have gone out of business and no government has helped them very much as yet. So why should we help the C.P.R. when we have to neglect our own interests to do it? It is a good job that there are enough taxpayers who understand the situation and ship and travel on their own railway or the C.P.R. would have had it swallowed up long ago.

"This is one of a number of letters I have attempted to write and all have been preached to the wind—lines of argument, that is, to do the same as the farmer does—namely to look after his own interests first and not to go over to his neighbour's and help him to pay his debts fix his fences and get his crops under shelter. We do the same thing when we ship or travel any other way but C.N.R. I argue.

"It may seem that I am playing a lone hand but It would surprise the public if they knew how I am supported in my views by influential men, not openly but on the side. I need help and I do hope that someone will come out and back up my arguments.

D. S. LaRue,
"60 Dundas Street."

ROYALTY FROM ALL THE WORLD TO ASSEMBLE AT GARTER CEREMONY

The richest pageant of all the celebrations of the Royal Silver Jubilee will be the assembly to be held in Windsor Castle on June 17 when 36 members of the Knights of the Garter will meet together for the first time in 22 years. A service to be held in St. Georgeis chapel will be the most colorful event of all the many colorful events to be witnessed in London for the next few months. The Knights, many of them monarchs of foreign lands, will wear their picturesque robes of dark blue mantle, embroidered with the garter and black velvet hats and white ostrich plumes. The procession will be headed by the King and Queen in the march from the castle to the chapel. The King's stall will be canopied with purple velvet fringed with gold and above it will hang his banner as sovereign of the order. The Queen, the only woman in the order, will sit on his right and will wear full robes of the order and the insigna set in diamonds presented to her by the Marys in the kingdom. Among those who are Knights of the Garter are shown in the above layout, TOP, LEFT to RIGHT, King Victor Emmanuel of Italy; King Gustav of Sweden; King George, Queen Mary, Emperor Hirohito of Japan and King Haakon of Norway. LOWER ROW, LEFT to RIGHT, Earl of Athlone, brother of Queen Mary; ex-King Alfonso of Spain; King Christian of Denmark; H.R.H. the Prince of Wales; Rt. Hon. Sir Austen Chamberlain, the only commoner in the order and the Duke of Connaught, probably the oldest member. All 36 members are expected to attend the brilliant ceremony of the most famous of chivalric orders.

ACTIVITIES OF GROUP DENOUNCED

Hamilton Welfare Officer Says Item Used to Stir Trouble

Hamilton, Ont., April 16.—(CP)—Activities of a "certain group, which criticizes everything we do and now picks on the saddest feature of all—the burial of a child," were denounced by A. P. Kappele, Welfare Commissioner at a meeting of the Board of Control.

His opinion was echoed by Mayor Herbert Wilton, who condemned agitators making use of a pathetic incident seemingly to stir up trouble.

Mr. Kappele made reference to the case of Ruth, two-year-old daughter of George Buckle, who died from pneumonia April 2. The Board received a letter purportedly from a member of the Workers' Protective Association, complaining of the way the child was buried and stating the coffin was a cheap looking box with straw sticking to it. The writer claimed the child was buried without clothing, the body wrapped in cheesecloth.

Mr. Kappele said the father had signed an affidavit attesting to these charges but later denied everything.

"I am inclined to sympathize with the father," Mayor Wilton said. "He was led on by a bunch of agitators, who probably said, 'Here, sign this', and the father in his distraction barely realized what he was doing."

Mr. Kappell said he had been informed by the undertakers everything was done in an exemplary manner. The casket was polished oak, the child's body was wrapped in a shroud and the service was conducted by Rev. H. F. Veale.

It was decided to obtain a report from the minister, but no action was taken on a suggestion to have the body exhumed.

"I think the Crown Attorney should deal with a few of these people furnishing false affidavits," commented Controller Freeman Treleaven.

ASSASSINATION PLOT REVEALED

Three European Statesmen Marked Says Report From Geneva

Geneva, April 16 (AP)—Local police today revealed a plot to assassinate three noted European statesmen and disclosed, despite denials in Marseille, two suspected Italian men and a woman had been "detained" in Marseille.

The statesmen pleoted against, said police here, were Pierre Laval, Foreign Minister of France, Dr. Eduard Benes, Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia, and Nicholas Titulescue, Foreign Minister of Rumania. They described the terrorists as "dangerous."

Police said the alleged Anarchist plot was directed against Benes and Titulescue on the ground they were believed hostile to revisions of peace treaties.

Authorities sent out a general alarm throughout Switzerland and to the German, Austrian and French frontiers to prevent the entrance of all suspected Anarchists.

Extraordinary precautions were taken in reinforcing the ordinarily strong police protection at the League headquarters and at the hotels where the various delegates are staying.

HEE! HAW! MULES LAUGH LAST!

Hee! Haw! The mule gets the last laugh on the horse. The demand for mules for varied purposes has gone far ahead of the supply. Breeding stock (TOP) farm animals (CENTRE) and army mules (BELOW) are selling now about 1929 prices, particularly in the southern United States. Farmers there have found that they cannot do without mules, much as they have tried. The advent of the tractor saw a discontinuance of the breeding of mules, but now the tractor has apparently proved none too practical. In Alabama mules are selling for as high as $525 a pair, with the average price close to $300.

ALL IMAGINATION SAYS O.A.C. HEAD NO GIRLS SEIZED

Investigation Does Not Reveal Any Man Handling at School

CHASED ON CAMPUS

Evidence Four Girls Asked Students to Come Out

Guelph, April 17—Describing the story as "all imagination," Dr. G. I. Christie, president of Ontario Agricultural College, Tuesday stated that an investigation into reported mistreatment of girl visitors at the college by students revealed "not the least trace of evidence that those girls were in any buildings on the campus or were manhandled in any way."

The story which appeared in a Toronto evening paper said that five girls from Hamilton were lured by students on Sunday night, their faces painted with mercurochrome and iodine, taken into the report said, they were stripped and forced to parade in the buttered room under the rays of a flashlight before about 25 young men.

Wing Instructor Constable A. L. Mennie, who was instructed by the Attorney-General's department to investigate the matter, Dr. Christie personally conducted an investigation which lasted about two hours or three last night.

The college president stated last night evidence showed that "on Sunday evening four girls appeared at the dividing between the chemistry building and the south wing of the student residences. They asked all the boys to come out, but the students did not go. On Monday night there was a row. A few boys ran out and the girls were chased across the campus. That is as far as the actual evidence goes. There are plenty of rumors, but there is no one we find who was close enough to know if the girls were young or old, if they were painted or who painted them."

Students Held Reliable

Dr. Christie stated there were reports that mercurochrome and shoepolish were rubbed on the faces of the girls, but there was no evidence whatever to support this statement. He stated that the students interviewed were known to be absolutely truthful and reliable, members of the basketball and football teams. He said, a signed statement from the assistant coach, who was also on duty for every minute of the time during which the alleged impropriety took place.

"We have very definite evidence that no incidents of any kind took the building." Dr. Christie said, and added, "there is no evidence whatever that any of the Kitchener girls . . ."

Dr. Christie launched the investigation immediately on his return from Hamilton, where he had spent the past few days.

Rumors on the street were to the effect that the O.A.C. had a number of students made up a party in a downtown hotel as the result of the occurrence on the campus, but no information of this report is available. It is also reported that other girls were seen boarding a Kitchener bus, but the conductor also did not indicate that they had been molested in any way.

Provincial Constable Mennie, it is understood, is endeavoring to discover the names of the girls supposed to have been involved in the incident, and this may lead to action by either city or provincial police until the report came from Toronto that the Attorney-General had ordered the request was made by Hon. Duncan McArthur, Minister of Agriculture in response to a query by Col. W. H. Price, former Attorney-General, in the legislature today.

DISPARITY SHOWN IN HYDRO REPORT

Increased Cost of Power And Smaller Increase In Revenues

Toronto, April 17—(CP)—Showing a wide disparity between increase in annual revenue and increase in the amount of power purchased on contract from outside municipalities between 1929 and 1934, the 27th annual report of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission was tabled in the legislature.

Figures in the report, which was tabled yesterday, indicated that in the commission spent $5,234,000 more for the purchase of power in 1934 than in 1929, while the revenue increase in 1934 over 1929 was $875,000.

Operation, maintenance and administration costs of the Niagara system advanced $100,341.

Improvement was noted in the Hydro system as a whole and in the Niagara system particularly. Approximately 2,000 more homes and farms were added to the system during 1933, and revenues jumped $1,447,-058.

The balance charged to the municipalities of the Hydro system dropped by $125,375 and the contribution to the sinking fund increased by $104,008. Total reserve contribution of the commission, chairman T. H. Lewis stated, increased $4,781,535 over 1933, an amount, less than in any year since 1930.

No Withdrawals

Notwithstanding withdrawal of $2,262,848 from the contingency reserve fund of the system and deposit of only $1,000,000 in the fund during 1934, the net debit chargeable to the municipalities of the system is 117,605 were made. The 1929 credit to the municipalities, as shown in the report, was $1,236,308.

Announcement of four new rural power rate charges, together with the previously announced free power for coats or 50 cents of free power totalling $100,000 during 1935, were made by Lewis.

These charges include a new rate of 40 cents a kilowatt hour for first consumption rates in districts where the present rate exceeds that figure, application to all districts of the maximum two cent second consumption rate, and establishment of a new 75 cents first consumption rate, the last mentioned to benefit particularly those districts where utilities electricity for domestic purposes.

The two Mabou youths were cousins, and in the second class car behind them was John Duncan's brother, Robert, bound with him for the government relief camp at the Halifax. Both the dead men had tickets, but they preferred to ride up front.

The one man unaccounted for was Edward Horndroff, Russian from North Sydney ,who was riding blind baggage.

Of about 50 passengers on the express, only three were hurt, and their injuries were slight.

Running Late

The express was running 15 minutes late at two o'clock this morning when the run-off occurred. Climbing out of overturned cars, the trainmen were hampered by darkness as they searched for the wreck and it was more than an hour before they recovered the body of the last victim.

HOUSE MEETS EARLY

Extra Time Used to Put Works Bill Through Before Recess

Ottawa, April 17—(CP)—Allocation of time on the radio to political leaders as a means of enlightening the public on political questions and election issues meets with favor from three members of the House of Commons, members of three different parties.

Yesterday the House passed the bill to extend the powers of the Canadian Radio Commission for two months, pending a new bill to be introduced in May, debated the public works bill and heard much criticism of the Radio Commission.

Hon. W. D. Euler, (Lib. Waterloo) moved for concurrence in report of public ownership, said the commission had failed to make public broadcasting a success, had not decreased the number of privately-owned stations, was providing mediocre programs until an ambiage sections of the Canadian population, without adequate broadcasting service.

In an effort to get the 1935 public works bill enacted prior to the Easter adjournment the House spends this morning and the afternoon sitting of the session. By unanimous consent the House members will have an extra two hours of employment taken place at six in the afternoon.

It was Humphrey Mitchell (Labor Hamilton East) who suggested political discussions on the air and the idea drew support from Hon. Ernest Lapointe, (Lib. Quebec East). Mr. Lapointe said the British Broadcasting Corporation allowed political leaders to speak over its network, and appointed a radio advisatory system had been worked out. There were three political parties in Canada entitled to recognition, and if the Commission could make a division between these parties the various groups and interests within them would be given a chance to themselves. Sir George Perley, Acting Prime Minister, expressed sympathy but was doubtful if such an arrangement of time satisfactory to all groups could be worked out.

Geneva, April 17.—(AP)— The League of Nations Council today adopted the Tri-Power Resolution condemning Germany for her repudiation of Treaty obligations with only Denmark abstaining from voting.

The Resolution, presented jointly by France, Great Britain and Italy, also deplored unilateral abrogation of Treaty obligations and requested that the League appoint a committee to consider what measures, economic and financial may be taken against future repudiators of international commitments.

Joseph M. Beck, Polish Foreign Minister, voted for the tri-power resolution, presumably, League authorities said, under strong persuasion from France, Poland previously had indicated her hostility toward the Tri-Power Resolution, on the ground of invoking sanctions against future treaty violators.

Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs, told the Council he was ready to join all countries, especially those who are members of the League, to respect International obligations.

Soon after the Council session completed his address Salvador Madariaga announced Spain would support the Tri-Power Resolution.

Argentina's delegate, Jose Maria Cantilo, announced he would support the resolution, adding his government desired, however, to make reservations relating to certain declarations of the resolutions with "Monroe Doctrine" principles which are clearly of European character".

'MOUNTIE' FORCE IS INSPECTED

Sergeant Moore, district supervisor of the R.C.M.P. stationed at Brockville, arrived in town this evening to inspect the local "Mountie" detachment. According to district supervisor, Sergeant Moore, a detachment of R.C.M.P. will arrive in Belleville to patrol the local railroad yards in the near future.

SPEAKS ON CONTROL OF THE PEACH MOTH

Speaking on the efforts of the department to control the peach moth and other destructive varieties of insect in the Niagara district, where he had been stationed, Dr. Van Steenburg of the Dominion Entomological and Parasitical Laboratory, this city, gave an instructive address to a large attendance at the regular meeting of the Kingston Y.M.C.A. supper club on Tuesday evening.

BRIGHT SUNSHINE FOLLOWS FROST

Bright sunshine which flooded the city and district today, and soft winds which fluttered curtains to and fro through opened windows, belied the one degree of frost which touched the section late last evening and early this morning. Frozen puddles on the roads and frost-rimmed roof tops greeted the eye of early birds today, but damage throughout the district to the tender shoots of fall wheat and clover was reported practically nil. By noon today the mercury had jumped to a high mark of nearly 50 above.

NORTHERN LAKES CLEARING OF ICE

Following the high winds of the past few days, frozen over lakes in the northern part of the county are now reported rapidly clearing of ice. Scores of ducks observed paddling and quacking in the lower harbor and bay for the past few weeks have now about deserted their resting ground and are on the trek north. Hundreds of the city swallow's have been congregating for the past day or so at the mouth of the Moira near the park where they are feeding on the tiny flies just above the surface of the water.

AGRICULTURE IS BASIS OF TALK

Kiwanis Club Entertained at Banquet at Stone Church

"Agriculture is the oldest of arts and the newest in science", said Professor W. J. Rennie, B.S.A., M.S.A., speaking before a joint meeting of the Kiwanis Club and residents in the community of the Stone Church, 4th concession of Sidney on Tuesday evening, the social affair being sponsored by the Kiwanis Club to further cement the business and social relationships between urban and rural dwellers. The meeting was a decided success, there being more than 80 per cent. of the Kiwanians present augmented by a large representation from the rural community. The address of the evening interspersed with a pleasing program was thoroughly enjoyed and more such functions will have a decided stimulating effect and help to fill out the doldrums of depression.

The Ladies' Aid of the Stone Church, was responsible for the banquet which was furnished and certainly ample justice was done to the good things provided. Delicacies of every sort, delectable viands were served in profusion and it was noted, that several of the Kiwanians had a hard time leaving the table. Cliff Barrager presided in his usual efficient manner, and Rev. Ken Bergeron certainly was a busy man collecting fines and has been paid plentiful. Lee R. Riggs presided at the piano in the church where the program was held, Douglas Browning contributed a solo, while Miss Muriel Vermilyea delighted with several vocal selections, both artists were roundly applauded by the audience. At the conclusion of the address and program in the church proper, the party retired adjacent to the banquet hall where a sugar party was held to round out an evening of fine entertainment.

Eddie Shapiro informed the Club that a Safety First Campaign was to be inaugurated in this city by the Kiwanis Club, signs being erected as prominently placed along the highways entering the city, on which advertising will be used to drive slowly through the city. The Club will co-operate with the Department of Highways in furthering this Campaign. Circulars will be distributed to motorists doing so, provide more safety on the highways. Chairs the announcement of the Sports' Committee, that wrestling would be on the card before long and asked support of the members to put the project across to raise funds. Dr. Ken Bergeron, Kiwanis Club booster for the meeting, emphasized the importance of that which his firm was interested. Each person present was given a tea pot stand, which consisted of placing a gallon of mixture for painting purposes. The banquet hall was much appreciated.

The speaker was introduced by Chester Smith and Kiwanian appreciation was expressed by P. C. MacLaurin. Professor Rennie declared a number of fine slides to illustrate his address from the staff of the Agricultural College to Agriculture". The speaker stated, that 31 per cent. of the land in this province is unused but of course there are vicissitudes connected with the unused land, that is not to be considered as waste land. The speaker stated, that radio, electric lights and telephones were taken for granted but is it ever considered what it would have been like five or six decades ago. Many things are taken for granted just the same as they do longer and it is only needed man to harness the ether. Professor Rennie illustrated the part of the O.A.C. played in developing agriculture, the explanation being most enjoyable.

Reeve A. L. Burke of Sidney moved a vote of thanks for the splendid evening sponsored by the Kiwanis Club.

POLICE COURT

No session of local police court was necessary in Belleville today, no arrests being made by the police despite the fact that a concert-ed drive against speeding, riding on sidewalks, netted results.

Twenty-three transients were afforded a warm and dry sleeping quarters at the police station last night, all having left the city "flying" when liberated today.

Local garages have been requested to discourage the practice of allowing trucks and transports to park on Front Street. According to police officials there is a local by-law in connection with trucks and transports from parking on the main thoroughfare, except when discharging or loading merchandise. Today two truck drivers were discovered parking on Front Street, and not in accordance to the city by-law. The matter will be subsequently dealt with.

It's a Rough and Gloomy Task for the Sailors Watching for Icebergs in Atlantic's Ship Lanes

An iceberg that has toppled over with $75-feet steamship, the Tuscania, nearby, indicating size of berg in comparison.

One of the giant icebergs—only one-eighth of an iceberg floats above the surface

The Belgian freighter Jean Jadot is towed by lockout cutter Mendota to Halifax

By J. WALTER DAVIDSON
Chief petty officer of coast guard cutter Mendota. Written especially for a Coastal Press in Canadian and Ontario Intelligencers.

The sinking of the Titanic in April 1912, aroused the interest of European and North American nations, resulting in the organization of what is now known as the International Derelict Destruction Ice Observation and Ice Patrol Service.

The dangerous ice area, which skirts and crosses the North Atlantic steamship lanes now is patrolled from March to July of each year—earlier or later if necessary. Each country entering into the agreement boats a proportionate cost. This is to be computed according to the shipping tonnage of each country.

The United States was asked to undertake the formation and operation of this service. Since 1914 and each succeeding spring two or three U. S. coast-guard cutters patrol the iceberg area.

This Year's "Watchmen"

This year the cutters designated for international ice patrol are the Mendota home port Norfolk, Va.), Pontchartrain (home port New York), General Greene (home port Boston), with the Tampa at New York assigned at standby vessel, prepared to depart within a few hours' notice.

The area patrolled by the vessels is the heart of both the east and west bound steamship lanes. Some part of this area is traversed by nearly every vessel plying between Europe and North America. It is one of the dreariest, gloomiest stretches on the face of the earth. Sweeping howling gales, snow storms, or probably both at the same time is present approximately 50 per cent. of the time, throughout the entire year.

Captain's Fears

Imagine the captain of an ocean liner, with hundreds, yes, even thousands of lives in his hands, wondering fearfully whether or not a mountainous iceberg blanketed with snow or fog, will loom up only a short distance from the bow of his ship. These bergs move constantly, drifting as the ocean currents, wind and sea drive them. Their spectre-like movement is unannounced.

Where do these bergs come from? Down from the mountains of Greenland, which is the birthplace of all the icebergs that live long enough to drift down to the steamer lanes, threatening death and disaster annually. Greenland is known to be covered with a vast ice cap, except for a small coastal region. This mantle of ice is continually moving down the mountain sides, creating what is known as glacial-berg-producers. The most continuous and greatest offenders are Disko bay, Jacobshaven, Umiviak, Karajak and Umanak.

Although a great number of bergs are cast off by the berg-producers, only a small percentage of them remain large enough to become death-lurking monsters to navigation. Even most of the tiniest are the bergs that are scouted by the vessels on international ice patrol. When a berg is located its size, position, rate of drift, kind of sea and weather conditions are broadcast by the ship's radio to all vessels plying the North Atlantic. These bergs range in size from that of a small house to the height of the Empire State building in New York, and as long as the average city block. Years of research work has resulted in determining that only one-eighth of an iceberg is above the water's level. Therefore, a berg rising to a height of 100 feet would probably extend to a depth of 800 or 1,000 feet.

Recreation

The personnel of the Mendota, a vessel 250 feet long and 42 feet wide, is composed of 10 commissioned officers, five warrant officers, 13 chief petty officers, and 50 petty officers seamen firemen and mess attendants. The ice patrol duty is confining to both officers and men, but modern recreation equipment tends to relieve the monotony. The ship is equipped with several radio sets and a talking motion picture machine. The ship's service store enables the men to purchase candy, soft drinks, ice cream, toilet articles, etc.

When a berg is sighted, this is the procedure:

"Iceberg, ho!" cries the lookout, through the voice tube from the crow's nest, to the bridge.

"Where a'may?" questions the conning officers from the navigating bridge.

"Broad on the starboard beam, about 20 miles distant," advises the lookout.

Hurrah, the first berg of the season. Sighted at 11.30 a.m. and the lookout sighting it receives a prize of $5, and is he happy, as that is a lot of money to a young man only receiving $21 a month.

Everybody Interested

The berg is reached at 12.35 p.m. It was approximately 23 miles distant when sighted. All hands not on the ship's cook appear on deck, taking pictures of berg number one, 1935 season. The berg is logged by the official ice observer as being 65 feet above the surface of the water, approximately 500 feet below surface, 310 feet long and 200 feet wide. There are several "growlers" (smaller bergs) in the vicinity, undoubtedly released from the parent berg.

Ships for a radius of 400 miles are informed of the position, rate of drift and size of the berg. That, however, isn't the last we see of this Mr. or Mrs. Berg. In a day of two we shall come around and locate it once more to determine the direction and its rate of drift as well as to observe whether or not it has diminished in size.

The days pass.

Having encountered considerable rough weather during this patrol, the crew is looking forward to being relieved by the other ship Pontchartrain. The wind has been blowing gale force, with mountainous seas breaking over the ship, which means that everyone is confined to the quarters below deck.

TABLE REPORT ON SLUM CLEARANCE

Committee Recommends Housing Authority be Formed

Ottawa, April 17—(CP)—Already equipped with much food for thought in the voluminous report of the Mass Buying Commission, members of the House of Commons will also carry away with them recommendations of their committee on housing to ponder over during the Easter recess.

This committee, which reported to the House yesterday made the arresting statement that the cost of slum clearance in Montreal would approximate $14,000,000; for Toronto the estimate was $12,000,000. But the report added, slum clearance problems must wait until there were changes in provincial and municipal laws, which at present hampered speedy and economic action.

The chief constructive suggestion of the committee was establishment of a Housing Authority which would have charge of a program of urban and rural housing. It would, according to the terms of the report, "initiate, direct, approve and control projects and policies." It would also allocate necessary monies in carrying out the program.

THE GREEN LIGHT

Such a little act as changing the color of the lights in the streets in the English village of West Coker has started something. Green-hued street lamps make the girls of the Somerset hamlet look "healthy." They make our faces same as if we're corpses just riz out the churchyard." Hot and heavy come the complaints to the district council.

A young huband complained that when his wife who was walking with him took a look at him under one of the new lamps, she gave him "whafor, and he drink had made me go green in the face. And when I told her she looked like a bit of green cheese herself, she took it as an insult instead of the plain, honest truth about her face under that light."

Romance is ruined, say the village belles, and complexions of rosebud hue are made to look like a 'devil's broth' of sickliness.

There is only one philosopher in the village, he is 84, and he says it is the only danged good thing that has been done for 40 years by the council. "I can read a book by that light, twenty feet away—, that is, if I ever wanted to do a thing like."

That comes of a progressive council. Other councils in other parts of the world who are "going modern" in science had better beware,—the green light.

REPLACEMENT

Owners of motorcars sometimes wonder why they have to consider the old automobile, but wearing-out is a tendency of all materials, particularly those used in the transport and motor business. Just now the Canadian National Railways expects to have to spend $27,000,000 in replacement of the equipment which has become useless or nearly so.

Freight cars to the number of thousands, hundreds of passenger cars, 2220 locomotives and thousands of units of working equipment have gone practically obsolete.

We see the same destruction of the work by time's hand in the destruction of motorcars. There is a very heavy demand for new motorcars, thanks to time and delayed replacement. Sooner or later the best of automobiles go the same road to the scrap heap whereon they are taken in pieces to go into other cars or machinery or iron for bridges. For years and years some persons have waited and the day of waiting has come to an end for them, the result an unprecedented demand for autos.

We see the same effect at work about the houses, the structures in every hamlet, town and city of this and all civilized countries need the painter and the paint. Without the two the decay is accelerated. The two delay the advance of decay.

Today in the early stages of revival we feel more and more the need for replacements. Repair operations which will save or restore what has been damaged by time. In machinery of course that cannot be done, replacement is the only way out.

CRICKET FIELD DAYS

How many persons recall the old days on "the old Cricket Field" in Front Ward where in the hectic days of the long since past historic matches were played. There were players of renown in those days in Belleville and their fame extended beyond the city's boundaries. It reached to Montreal, Toronto and other places. At Upper Canada College, the late Rev. D. F. Bogert, W. H. Biggar, George C. Biggar and W. B. Northrup were brilliant players on the "First Eleven."

Will cricket come back? Will it recover some of that interest it had for the people of a generation or two ago?

A good sign is seen in the interest the schools are taking in the plan of Ontario cricketeers to make the game a school game. It is to be hoped that Belleville takes to it and develops this noble competition among the boys of the schools.

IN NEW YORK PULPITS

"The power of God is manifest in gentlemen and heroes. It is the only thing that can make us civil. Good manners are merely the result of the reverence that one holds for another person," said Bishop A. S. Lloyd, in St. Stephen's P. E. Church, New York. "The kindness of the One who made us is amazing. That poor thing which we call man has an opportunity to share with God. He believes that man is competent to come up to His level.

"Everyone has some hero to worship—a man who is courageous, wise and strong, a man from whose examples and actions we can mold our characters. That is simply the condition without any qualifications; through such men the manifestation of God's power is revealed."

X—X—X—X

"Our Lord's life is not a loose collection of ends idly thrown together," Rev. Dr. George H. Talbot said at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. "Those who do not stand with Him at Calvary cannot hope to share in the resurrection celebration. Jesus was crucified on Good Friday for what He did on Palm Sunday.

It was the only time when He declared Himself to be the Messiah, the Son of God. And what He did was the plan of God."

Not only the world, but a large section of the church and its leaders have rejected Christ as leader and teacher and chosen a Barabbas or Karl Marx in His place, Rev. J. J. Kelley declared at Calvary Baptist Church. "Karl Marx, the renegade who never did a day's work in his life, but who never believed a word he wrote, Karl Marx, the plagiarist, who stole all his ideas as you know, if you have read his works! He urged France to open her doors to Germany, while writing to Bismarck and praising the German army. Isn't that what Russia is doing today? Is not this pacifism while she trains the biggest army of any country? While many in the church and many of its leaders, reject Christ, Rev. Mr. Kelly said that there are millions today who know and love Him.

He speaks as truly to us today through His spirit and through His written word as when He was on earth. There are many who quibble over the Virgin birth, the Resurrection and the Ascension. It is time to stop quibbling and to fasten our eyes on the fact that the full Deity of Christ makes Him the full revelation of God. We cannot get the people to believe in the Resurrection by argument, but only by letting them see Jesus living in us. One curse of Christian living is worth a ton of argument.

"The love of God is beyond human ken but not beyond human experience. We cannot understand it but we can embrace it. We who love Jesus are to Him what He is to God."

X—X—X—X

"There is no better way of determining a man's faith than by watching how he approaches and undertakes each case," said Rev. Dr. Ainslie in Fort George Presbyterian hurch. "Take the cross of duty. Some people always approach everything they must do by spending hours of worrying before they begin. This is to constant trepidation that something will go wrong, that some feature will prove beyond their capabilities.

"Then there is the person who surrounds himself with the feeling of self-pity. If he had a headache or some other complaint, he does not hesitate to tell everyone about it, how he feels, how much he suffer and thus he creates an air of mystery all around him.

"The best way is the man who undertakes everything with an attitude of stoicism. Nothing seems sufficiently important to annoy or 'throw' him. This is not very healthy because sometimes by keeping feelings entirely under control the sting is all the greater.

"But a Christian should not approach a duty in any way. In any way he must have faith in God. By combining sincere effort with unfaltering faith he will enjoy a peace and contentment not found in any other way."

A distinctive feature of the service for a Presbyterian Church was the distribution of palms to the members of the congregation as they filed out. The pastor explained that this Palm Sunday gesture was a holdover from the time of the church's establishment when it was the only Protestant church in the vicinity.

X—X—X—X

"Catholic women should do the Joan of Arc thing by undertaking the individual militant crusade against the anti-Christian and immoral practices of the day," Rev. John B. Kelly, chaplain of the Catholic Writers' Guild, declared at the annual communion breakfast of the Catholic Council, Catholic Daughters of America, Francis A. Stevens, president of the Holy Name Society of the parish, pointed to the need for active lay leadership among Catholic women's organizations to bring about a sane censorship of the stage and screen: Consumers' resistance must originate with women because statistics show they form the larger part of average audiences and usually influence men in their choice of theatrical entertainment.

"Every Catholic woman has a divine vocation to be an example of Christian virtue in the eyes of the world," Father Kelly said. "And it is her responsibility to use her feminine influence to prevail upon men to bring them to the feet of Christ."

X—X—X—X

The death of Christ was a power of expulsion and a power of attraction, President Barbour of Brown University said at the Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas. "Such a thing as the Crucifixion could not happen today. There has been a revolution of human thought and of public opinion. The forces that rule modern civilization are far different from those of 1,800 years ago." Dr. Barbour said that the influence of the life of Christ has had an elevating effect on the moral life of all mankind.

"Christianity today is a bigger thing than the Christian Church. It is vastly larger than any system of doctrine and larger than all systems of doctrine. Many men who have never been baptized are just as really the disciples of Christ as those whose names are inscribed on the church rolls, and it is heartening to see how the influence of Christ is permeating society.

"Doctrinal and experimental tests have been made which are unscriptural and unwarranted, and the level sense of men has said 'We won't submit to them! There is but one test. Jesus Christ is the door to the sheepfold's."

THE RIDDLE SOLVED

Not by many syllables,
Sentences involved,
Has the riddle of our life
Ever yet been solved.

Not by windy argument,
Weighing pro and con
Have we found the goal to which
We are marching on.

So the wisest cease to grope
Through the endless maze;
They have learned to find life rich
In Earth's changing ways.

These have learned to prize things near Higher than things far:
Dearer than the might-have-been
Loom the things that are.

Not by gusty syllables,
Arguments involved,

THE 'SILLY ASS' TYPE of Englishman, caricatured in the Yankee drama and played up in part by P. G. Wodehouse, the author, as foil for his immortal Jeeves, the perfect butler, has been taken by some as a type for the average young Englishman of title. Of course the 'Silly Ass' is not a type so much as a disguise, and not at all typical of the monocled sons of English bigums. It is refreshing therefore, to read about Captain Robert Anthony Eden, who at thirty-eight is one of the best known and cleverest diplomats in the great conclave of nations now manoeuvering for advantage in the everlasting game of European politics. He it was who accompanied Sir John Simon to Berlin to talk turkey to Herr Hitler, the Bad Boy of Europe, who keeps crying for more lollypops. It was Anthony Eden who stroked down the militant hairs of Italy and Jugoslavia in 1934 when war threatened over the assassination of King Alexander at Marseilles. Recently he has been conducting a series of conferences in the capitals of Europe which may have a powerful influence in preserving peace. He is Sir John Simon's assistant in the British Foreign Office, and his chief places great reliance in the latter's judgment. He was a Brigade-Major in the Army during the World War before he was twenty-one, and won the Military Cross for gallantry. On active service, it will not be long before interested in Oriental languages, a study of which he followed up later at Oxford University, winning first-class honors. Then he turned to politics and was elected member of parliament. His parliamentary career was meteoric, and now at thirty-eight he is perhaps the most outstanding figure in parliamentary circles, combining as he does so much knowledge of foreign peoples and languages with shrewd diplomatic ability, all of which makes him perhaps the most valuable unit in the Foreign Office. It was Captain Eden who arranged the meeting of European nations at Stresa in an effort to devise peace plans that would prove more effective suicide to the war fever which keeps breaking out in various places of Europe, spurred by Hitler spies from Berlin. That his health should break down after so much strenuous labor during the past month or so is not to be wondered at, and his absence from the peace conference in consequence is a matter of sincere regret. So important was the conference and so serious the absence of Captain Eden that Premier Ramsay MacDonald himself took his place.

NOTHING SURER THAN DEATH and taxes is the saying, and taxes sure do come hard to pay, little or much. In this country we think that taxes are high and a considerable burden, but a traveller recently returned from England, states that Canadian taxes are as bagatelles compared with those in England. Between the War and the Depression, England has been hard hit, and the taxes are enormous, but the people over there realize that the nation has been through a tough time and are cheerfully meeting the imposts. Belleville must, recently in England, says it is quite noticeable the number of Baby Austins driven by people who formerly drove Rolls Royces. Baby Austin license costs $80 a year while larger cars cost from $150 up, hence folks with reduced incomes are riding the Depression out in Baby Austins.

50 Years Ago

APRIL 17th, 1885

All yesterday afternoon the western bank of the river was thronged with crowds of spectators viewing the flood. About four o'clock the foot bridge was out of line about two feet and was resisting a terrible pressure as the ice jammed against it. Through the kindness of Mr. John Palmer an Intelligencer reporter was enabled to view the flooded district from a dog cart. Dundas street was flooded from Christ church to the bay. Everett street was also flooded and the lower floors of all the dwellings were deluged. South of bridge street the water reached to the foot of Murney's Hill, and the people, although many of them were driven from the lower parts of their homes, were hopeful that the worst was over, but such was not the case. Between six and seven o'clock in the evening, the unbroken ice below the lower bridge yielded to the pressure. A general move resulted slowly at first, then an irresistible rush. The ice in the harbor and at the middle of the river had refused to move but the current was so strong that it turned to the west before it reached the asbery and found an outlet down Brock street, and from there through Willard and Mary place to the bay. "The river was jammed with ice from the upper bridge. All this mass found an outlet by the route described. The scene was grand to behold, but the situation was terrible beyond expression, to people of the flooded district. Doors were burst open by the ice, windows smashed and furniture overturned. And all this without a moment's warning. Fences were broken down, fruit and shade trees uprooted and wood piled in yards carried away. On all sides the work of destruction was carried on; as an instance the stable of Mr. W. H. Campbell's house was smashed in and the ice entered the lower rooms. All the light furniture was afloat and was carried into the cellar. Others carried away, Mr. W. E. Vandervoort had a coal shed carried off and a piano damaged so that it is all but useless. Carpets in the flooded district will be ruined as the dirt in the river will leave them covered with every kind of mud. A number of smaller houses were shifted from their foundations, but none were carried away. Outbuildings were swept away and carried to the bay. Some calves and pigs were drowned. As soon as the position assumed its dark aspect, Mr. William Sinclair formed a rescuing party and went to the relief of sufferers in boats. The old and helpless were cared for first. Nearly all were taken from upper windows into boats and conveyed to dry land where every door was open to the assistance of the sufferers. Miss Prentiss, who was at the residence of Mr. Sexton, was badly frightened by the ice and was taken home by Mr. Brack and cared for by Mrs. Brack. The house she was taken from, a large roughcast house, was badly wrecked and is considered. The work of the rescuers was kept up nearly all night. The suffering endured by many families will be terrible. All were compelled of necessity to seek refuge in their chambers, as the water was not less than three feet in many houses. No fires could be kept up and the dampness and hunger and apprehension of danger made it a night of terror. At daybreak this morning the good work was resumed and assistance extended to all who needed it. Fifty families have been made homeless. Application has been made to the Mayor to will place the city hall at their disposal for the flood subsides. All the morning a heavy volume of water was passing down the streets, but the ice had all passed out. On the south side of Bridge street the water came up to the sidewalk in front of the Intelligencer office; from here south Front street was a rushing stream of water, so deep that a row-boat was used by driving through. A good many were wrecked out of their homes, but the alarm was soon over, as the water gradually fell off, but did not cease to flow until about 11 o'clock this morning.

About ten o'clock this morning the channel down Brock and Murney streets was filled with ice and the water falling soon made the inhabitants of people living on the flooded district. It was but a short time before the ice was jammed with the bridge. The ice was found piled to the depth of ten feet, and considerable damaged in the cracks were found window frames, some pieces of furniture, mattresses, etc. All of the fences are swept away as well as many outbuildings and barn ovens. Porches and verandahs were wrecked and lost sight of in the debris. On every side was destruction and desolation. The ice in the harbor broke a little this morning, when a move of the bridge was made, the water was rising and falling at intervals all day.

Some incidents during the flood: Daniel Cunningham removed his goods and stock-in-trade on the market square all night. Mr. S. B. Jones lost 2,000 cords of wood piled near the asbery. The whole lot, together with his carts, and horses, will be carried off by the flood. He estimates his loss at $2,000. Thos. Parsons was rescued from the top of her house by Peter Anderson cutting a hole through the roof. Mrs. Conway passed the night in the attic of her home with no clothing but her night dress. An invalid man fell into Mr. Lockety's cellar and was drowned. Mrs. Stout, Mr. Harrold fell into the water on his back in such a manner that he could not rescue himself and would have drowned had not Mr. James Mills rescued him. The water was a foot deep in Mr. Mills. Hall's drygoods store yesterday afternoon. He was prepared for it and the damage will be slight. Many families sought refuge on the upper floors of sheds and some were they spent the night in fear and trembling. Mr. Cooper's mill had a portion of the water wheel knocked in by the ice yesterday afternoon. Mr. Richards' grocery mill was also damaged. It is a question of how the immediate damage done along Front street and in the flooded district west of Dundas street. Excitement and will reach well into the thousands.

LIBERAL BOLTS ON L.C.A. VOTE

Registers Franchise With Opposition on Bill to be Passed

J. E. Crawford (Liberal Port William) voted with the Opposition in the Legislature Tuesday on a motion that certain Government amendments to the Liquor Control Act be not given third reading but be referred back to committee for further consideration.

It was the second defection from Government policy in as many days Col. F. Fraser Hunter (Liberal, St. Patrick) having on Monday night bitterly opposed passage of the Border Cities Amalgamation bill.

Mr. Crawford explained to the press last night that his decision to vote against the Government applied only to the amendment which gave the City of Galt and the towns of Wallaceburg, Alexandria and Lancaster, the right to establish beverage sale of beer and wine without any further vote of the electors. He was not opposed, he said, to other liquor law amendments before the House.

The Opposition motion proposed that the amendment covering the Galt municipalities in question be struck from the bill entirely. Opposition Leader George S. Henry submitted that the amendment was "deliberately denying" to the citizens of two places the right to vote. It was hard, he said, to reconcile the viewpoint of Premier Hepburn, as represented by this amendment, with the attitude he had voiced a week ago to a Galt deputation, when he had promised that if the deputation would come back to him with a "no beer sales" petition signed by more than 50 per cent of the ratepayers, he would see to it that the city would get no beverage rooms.

FALL WHEAT LOSS IS VERY HEAVY

Cold Dry Winds Cause Losses as High as 100 Per Cent

Toronto, April 17—(CP)— Cold dry winds that swept across central and southern Ontario in the spring weeks have brought damage to fall wheat estimated as high as 100 per cent in some districts and generally high throughout the province, according to the weekly crop report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture issued Tuesday. Spring seeding has started except in Northern Ontario.

Peterboro, Middlesex and Lincoln were the only counties able to report near normal conditions. In Southern Ontario some fields are being resown. One farmer in Durham County has already plowed his fall wheat under and many fields in the county are reported 100 per cent losses. Haldimand County has suffered 50 to 60 per cent destruction and Northumberland about 50 per cent.

Warm rain has been urgently needed throughout the province for the last two weeks.

Fruit trees in Lincoln county are reported likely to bloom earlier this year are some vegetables transplanted have been done. Simil has hit field crops in Durham County as "poor pretty."

Four out of seven counties in Western Ontario report fall wheat badly hit with doubtful prospects for recovery even if warm rains fall soon. Grey County expects a fairly satisfactory recovery in fall wheat and Bruce County crops look fair to good. But Malton, Huron, Peel and Perth fear heavy damages in most parts.

Fall wheat is very patchy in Brant county in Southern Ontario and far from good in Welland, whilst unfavorable weather conditions have had a very serious effect on the crop in Haldimand.

Lennox and Addington fall wheat crops are badly injured but Carleton, Frontenac, Leeds and Renfrew have escaped heavy losses.

DREAD DISEASE TRANSMITTED FROM HORSES

Housemen Must be on Guard Against House Diseases

By Louis E. Risch, M.D., Ph.D
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

Copyright 1935
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

A disease of the horse, called "glanders", occasionally is transmitted to man.

A germ known as the "Bacillus Mallei" causes this disease, in which, in a typical case, small lumps appear in the nostrils. When such nodules appear under the skin, the disease is similar, but it is then called "farcy." Although the disease in man is not common, a human being can be infected from having been in contact with an animal suffering from this disease. The germs seem to enter the human host through abrasions on the skin surface as well as through the mucous membrane of the nose.

Acute as well as chronic forms of glanders exist. In the acute cases, the disease develops in about three days. At the site of the entrance of the germ, there is soreness, redness and swelling. In another two or three days' time the inside of the nose becomes involved, the nodules which have developed there break down and cause ulcers. Such an acute case is usually fatal in a week or two.

In the chronic form of glanders the symptoms are often mistaken for a chronic nose and head cold. Such a condition may exist over a long period without the true nature of the malady being suspected. Even a sore throat may develop, and this, of course, helps to confuse the true clinical picture.

Although chronic glanders is not necessarily fatal, it may run on for months and months before a cure is effected.

Acute farcy is likewise a fatal disease, but it may run from five to fifteen days before death occurs. Unlike glanders, the disease remains unaffected.

Chronic farcy also exists. Here the nodules under the skin usually are confined to the extremities. When these nodules break down and form ulcers, they run deeply into the tissues and are very difficult to heal.

Persons who come into daily contact with horses and mules are usually the victims of the dread disorders. Such persons are stock tenders, stable men, farmers and veterinarians.

As already mentioned, glanders may be confused with an ordinary cold and this makes it unusually difficult to recognize.

On the other hand, persons who are fond of horses and who come into contact with them frequently, should not necessarily become alarmed because so dread a disease as glanders exists. Stables, as a rule, watch after the health of their animals most carefully, and veterinarians are regularly employed when an animal becomes ill.

Do not, therefore, allow this article to prevent you from going riding, if you like it. As the old saying has it, "Nothing is better for the inside of a man than the outside of a horse!"

DR. Rish's Daily Diet Hint
It is a fallacy to believe that pie is especially difficult to digest. To be sure, the crust must be well baked. The crust does remain in the stomach somewhat longer than the pie-filling, but the difference is negligible. To eat cheese with pie has the effect of keeping the pie in the stomach longer still.

Wife Thrashes Noted Explorer Defence Asserts

Bridgeport, Conn., April 17—How Carveth Wells, noted lecturer and explorer, was horse-whipped by his first wife, daughter of a wealthy Toronto society family, is expected to feature testimony tomorrow in a suit for $50,000 started here Tuesday by his ex-wife.

Mrs. Louard T. Wells, wife No. 1, who married the celebrated explorer in Toronto in 1910, asks for that sum from the present Mrs. Wells, blonde, and twenty years her junior, charging that the explorer's love was stolen from her.

The defense, wife No. 2, alleges that the Toronto woman lost the affections of the explorer, that she beat him with a dog whip and riding crop and showered other indignities on him.

Mrs. Wells No. 1 declared she married in direct settlement of a marrow bow and why she once did whip her explorer husband at the Lotos Club, but vehemently denied having done so at any other time.

The first Mrs. Wells told of her wedded life with the explorer, following their Toronto marriage until the 1932 divorce, when the present Mrs. Wells, former secretary to the man who climbed the Mountains of the Moon, was named as co-respondent.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

Although Happily Married He Yearns for Bachelor Days

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Cupid didn't really overtake me until I was almost 40, when I married the one and only girl, who is 15 years younger than myself. She is an ideal wife, a perfect mother, the best of housekeepers, and I have more happiness than I deserve. But now I yearn sometimes for the aliphoal ease of my bachelor days.

When I strew newspapers about, come to the table in my dressing gown and slippers, leave cigar stubs around, my wife does not say a word. But she does say it's hard to make the children neat when their adored father is untidy. If there were only room enough in the apartment for me to have a cubby-hole in which I could be as messy and untidy as I please it would solve this problem, which is beginning to get on my nerves.

Bachelor Husband

It's a strain for a bachelor husband to live up to the standards of a thoroughly tidy young wife. But think of your compensations. Your wife refers to you as a well adored father; if you had remained a bachelor, you would probably be as lonesome as you were untidy.

Just ask her to let you have an occasional night out with the boys, down evening. If she's sensible, she'll agree to this.

TOO BUSY TO MAKE LOVE

Dear Miss Fairfax:

- Since I was a little girl, I've liked the same boy, and now that we've grown to be young folks, I've learned to love him, and he says he loves me. Someone told me that because I do not see or speak from him very often he doesn't care for me.

I don't want to go steady with as I feel I'm too young, but I would like to see this boy more than from him more often. He is very ambitious. He works , goes to school two nights a week, plays in an orchestra and studies wood lessons of course, these things keep him very busy. What is your opinion?

In-Love-With-Him

A young man who has so many interests can hardly be expected to pay devoted attention to a girl, especially when she says she does not want to go steady. I would be told you he cares for you, and with a serious boy of this type, that usually means a good deal.

Since you tell me you are childhood friends, there could be no objection to your writing to him occasionally, I should think.

Jack is so good-looking that he has been thoroughly spoiled by all the girls of his acquaintance. I send him a box of homemade candy for a valentine. He knew it came from me, because I'm the only girl who makes that kind of candy, but he never acknowledged it. Should I get "mad" with him, or keep this up?

Bab

You will be giving your hand away, my dear, if you get "mad" with this young man for not acknowledging the candy. A good dose of indifference might work better than a box of sweets, since you tell me all the girls spoil him.

SIX HAS PECULIAR COIFFURE

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My girl is as pretty as a picture, but she has the darnedest way of doing her hair. She wears a "spit-curl" over either ear, and I'm ashamed to take her out with me because two or three fellows in the shop have laughed about it.

She's grown to womanhood since I won't take her out. I don't like to hurt her feelings by telling her.

Matt

Why not try telling her she's too pretty to spoil her looks? Suggest in such an unbecoming fashion—and in a fashion I'm inclined to think is out. I'm under the impression that that freakish coiffure went out some time ago.

A good effect is more important than the fabric of the frock or the magnificence of the accessories worn with it. All eyes are busy examining a simple frock of pale blue taffeta lace with a cape of taffeta quilted in the scroll and flower design of the lace. The frock has a tiny self-buttons down the bodice.

A nice friend to the simple flannel suit is the shirtwaist blouse in brown or blue linen. A popular design has a properly tucked and pleated bosom section with a covered buttons and a pointed turn-down collar. This is an extremely popular number.

At least one knitted costume should be in the wardrobe of the woman who is fond of sports dress. To be worn in the country or suburbs during late Spring is a boucle suit of fine write yarn with stripe edging for the collar of the jacket and for the front of the ensemble blouse. A dark blue scarf is knotted about the throat.

Under the chin goes the strap of an amusing beach hat It is in white straw with circle of blue yarn making the band of the flat crown and also forming a chin strap. The model is also in red with yellow yarn tufts.

Warm weather invariably brings out smart coat frocks. A new model is in black crepe with revers and pockets accented with self-cuttings. Jewelled buttons and a veste white Valenciennes lace are neat details.

Off to the office and feeling happy wearing an attractive sports coat. A grand model is in brown and beige striped tweed with double-breasted closing above the waistline, a small collar and big patch pockets.

Sunny skies bring forth lovely hats. White grosgrain is used for a good model with closely stitched brim.

Very clever is the line of a coat by an American designer. It is of black woolen and has a modified leg o'mutton sleeves which are seamed in an extended shoulder line. The seaming is released to form a high, ruffled collar.

A kind heart as well as a smart designing talent helped to create a most useful cape which is ideal for the woman who has to watch her budget. It is in navy blue woolen and barunduki and can be worn to form a jacketed bodice effect with small cape sleeves, or with sleeves omitted, it becomes a regular flare-back cape.

Just out is a grand ensemble for general wear. It consists of a shirtwaist type frock in navy blue woolen worn with a loose swagger coat in bold blue and white check. The coat has the fulness concentrated in back and is worn open in front.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Copyright, 1935

CHRISTENING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it proper to have my mother and father act as godparents for my baby The reason I chose them is because I have only two brothers, one is married but my sister-in-law is in poor health and does not attend the same church that I do, and my husband's people are of another religion, and not very friendly. I have no other close friends from whom to choose.—

2. Would it be all right to use a christening outfit consisting of a coat, dress and petticoat that was made by my mother and grandmother and used for my children ing twenty-five years ago? It is quite long but in very good condition. Or do you think it would be too old-fashioned to use?

B.

1. It is considered unsuitable to choose grandparents to act as godparents for a baby. The advantage of having godparents for a child is that they can be his child's spiritual advisers, so that, if the child is left alone in the world, it will have the protection of authority. Since the grandparents' relationship to the child is so close already, choosing them as godparents doesn't seem to have any point. Usually very intimate friends are chosen to be godparents of a child. But, if in your case, this is impossible then you will have to forego tradition and custom, and choose the godparents according to your wish.

2. I thoroughly approve, enthusiastically approve, of your using the christening outfit that you describe in your letter. It will bring with it a fine and charming sentiment, and the fact that it is "old-fashioned will add greatly to its charm. It is similar to having a bride wear her mother's wedding dress, always a lovely plan.

SOUP OR BOUILLON

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We have had a discussion in our family as to the correct use of bouillon cups. Will you solve our problem for us Is it correct to serve cream soup in bouillon cups, using bouillion spoons as the silver service

G.

Bouillon cups are of such small capacity that they are usually used only at luncheon, and for consommes and bouillons. With these they are used either the bouillon spoons, or the spoons. For the cream soup served either at luncheon or, informally, at dinner, the cream soup cups (the wide soup cups) are more suitable and convenient. To accompany these cream soup cups, the so-called cream soup spoons are most convenient.

TOM'S CANDY

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If you were entertaining ten or twelve people and one of your guests gave you a box of candy, would you, while passing it to your other guests, casually mention that it was from Tom Brown? Which do you think would be better — to let Tom Brown have the nice feeling of knowing others know he was so thoughtful, or of sparing the other gentlemen the uncomfortable sensation that they didn't remember to do that?

D.

I'd open the box of candy, pass it to the guests, and give Tom the credit for his thoughtfulness, saying something like this, "Won't you have some of Tom's candy"

SERVING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it always the rule that serving-dishes are passed to the guests at the left, and the beverages are always served to the guests at the right

Hostess.

Yes.

Something new in printed enamelled ware in the idea of cutting a cape so that it complements a one-sided peplum on the dress. The fabric is a heavy silk crepe with light blue bird motifs on a black ground. A white pique collar is used for the one-sided cape.

KIRKWOOD—ANDERSON

Toronto.—The marriage of Miss Rose Anderson, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Anderson of Leslieville, to James Taylor Kirkwood of Largs, Scotland, formerly of Ottawa, took place yesterday at noon, at the home of the bride's brother, Dr. H. B. Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, South Drive. A bank of palms and ferns, with standards of snapdragons and Easter lilies formed the background for the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Dr. H. H. Bingham, assisted by Rev. Mr. Butchard of Hagersville. Miss Margaret McNeil played the wedding music and during the signing of the register, Miss Elsie Hawthorne of Medicine Hat, cousin of the bride, sang.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Dr. Anderson, wore a gown of oyster satin with insets of Venetian lace. Her veil of tulle fell from a cap of the matching lace and she carried a shower of Bridal roses and lily-of-the-valley. The bride's attendant was Master Alan Selby, son of Dr. and Mrs. David Selby, of Toronto, and grandnephew of the bride, as page boy. He wore a pale yellow satin suit.

Mrs. H. B. Anderson, who received with the bridal couple, wore a smart French print gown with white weave sash, forming a train. Her flowers were a corsage of pansies. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkwood left later for a motor trip east, the bride wearing a smart navy blue ensemble with a cable cape. They will live at Largs, Scotland.

Mr. and Mrs. Kirkwood visited in Belleville yesterday and were guests at the Hotel Quinte.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Living on Velvet"

The Gloriously Mad Romance of People You'll Be Mad About

"Living on Velvet," which is heralded as a powerful drama with a most unusual romance, is scheduled as the feature attraction at the Capitol Theatre on Thursday.

It has an all-star cast, headed by Kay Francis, who has two leading men in Warren Williams and George Brent. The story tells of two men in love with the same girl, each of whom tries to give her up for the other man.

Brent, "straying a dashing daredevil, whose mental attitude toward life has been warped by a terrific airplane accident in which his parents and sister are all killed, and he escaped, considers himself the same as a "dead" man, and rushes from one mad escapade to another, trying but unable to forget.

He is always saved from the consequences of his rash acts by his friend, a part played by Warren Williams, who stands by him like the Rock of Gibraltar.

When Brent falls in love with the woman his friend is hoping to marry, he rushes away. But Kay Francis who has the role, is also infatuated with the aviator and sends the one friend she can always depend on, Warren William, to find the irresponsible youth and marries him in spite of the opposition of her family.

Follows a series of trying experiences at domesticity, for which the man is utterly unfitted and in which he has no

Amateur Actors in Old Days Ranked With the Professionals

Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., Furnishes From Records Interesting Details of Amateur Acting When Belleville Was Village And Town

Drama, portrayed by some of the best Shakespearean actors this country could provide; lighter theatricals rivalling the best entertainment that even New York playhouses could offer—all these were played in this city nearly one hundred years ago by non-professional actors whose fame as thespians was known far and wide, it is revealed by the valuable and carefully kept files of local historical events kept by Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., of this city.

(Following a noticeable and encouraging revival of interest in amateur performances not only in Belleville, but throughout the country generally, it is shown by the old files that Belleville has always had a supply of talented actors. It is said that the late W. R. Carmichael, and the late ex-Mayor Allan McRae and others of this city rendered Shakespeare equal to the best totors.)

The early pioneers had for their schoolbooks, the Bible and Shakespeare with the result that even the humble Simpson tavern without the adornment of the modern stage was the scene of many a splendid dramatic entertainment. It was here, at the corner of Bridge and Dundas street and Front that the budding Garrisks and Davy Jones' wrights, with the actors foregathered of a night and with scarcely a rehearsal at all, went through their lines and parts perfectly - in the many plays that were arranged.

The late R. K. Curlett was the author of a splendid drama entitled "The Three Students". Nevin Doyle was the author of an opera called "The Golden Age". Had either of them been spared to this present day they might possibly have made their mark in the world as some of the most successful dramatists of the age.

But besides drama, there was plenty of comedy, too. Amateur minstrel entertainments were common and drew large houses. A roster of those who took part in these non-professional entertainments of that period was almost a complete "Who's Who" of Belleville nearly a century ago.

The following is a list of persons interested in amateur theatricals nearly a century ago, in Belleville:

He was well known throughout the country. He was a lawyer and was a very prominent politician in his day. He was a member of the Legislative Council for several terms and was a very popular citizen.

Francis McAnnany clerked for Capt. Baldwin in 1832 in a store where the axe factory stood. He was a member of the Board of Police for a time and occupied the Mayor's seat for a number of years. He was Treasurer of the County.

Benjamin Dougall was considered the leading lawyer of his day. He was born in the Township of Thurlow and was an uncle of Mr. A. D. Dougall, of the firm of Dougall and Falkiner, and became County Judge.

Henry Corby was an open heart-ed Brition and a great admirer of British institutions. He came here in 1832 and went back to England in 1835, returning in the same year. He was a prominent man in Belleville and filled the office of Mayor one year and represented East Hastings in the Legislature during two parliaments. He was the father of the late Senator Corby.

Benjamin F. Davy was a native near Bath. He was a very prominent business man in his day and took considerable interest in local affairs. He also held the position of Mayor.

Col. J. S. Turnbull was a Scotchman and came here in 1816. He was at first a clerk, and later carried on business in the frame building north of the Confederation House.

W. Hope was an Irishman and a former Sheriff of this County.

Dr. Lister was an Englishman and came here in 1842. He was considered to be an excellent surgeon and possessed a wide acquaintance.

Samuel Bull came here from Lower Canada to manage a business establishment. In 1832 he became a member of the firm of McNab and Bull who engaged heavily in the lumber trade.

Road Builders Scoop Up Fish Using Nature's Own Implements

Fifteen Nice Suckers Go to Superintendent's Table

St. Ola, April 17—(Special)— A couple of the boys went out one evening this week with no fishing tackle but a flashlight and their bare hands. They "scooped out" fifteen nice suckers, the first of the season. They cleaned them and presented them to the chef for the superintendent's table. One of the waiters, from Toronto, asked "why sh'r suckers so good this time of year but no other time." He received his answer from an old fisherman at the table. "Because this is the only time of year they have no bones in them." Anyone doubting this just ask Steve Licence.

Sunday, April 14th witnessed the opening game of the highway ball club, with a remarkable performance by the two leading teams in the league. The "Ottawa Senators" and the "Wellington House Bear Cats". After weeks of scouting a field level enough to make a diamond was discovered less than ten miles from the right-of-way and the opposing teams lined up with their respective cars strongly in evidence. The game was impartially umpired by that internationally known, umpire, Gilmour. At one time a near riot was narrowly averted by the sun diplomatically drawing a cloud across his face. The Bear Cats had complained that the sun shining on "Gillk" Pad dazzled their eyes so that they could not see the ball after it left the pitcher's hand. But from an unbiased spectator's point of view the real reason was that the Ottawa pitcher, who by the way is a driller by trade pitched such a fast ball that the Wellingtons could not see it. The game was a great success and enjoyed by all.

Score fifty-four to four in favor of the Senators.

STYLES IN "ROBERTA"

A colorful Scotch clan plaid is used in this spectator sports top coat. The color scheme is brilliant blue, green, red and yellow with just a mixture of black and white. The wool frock is oyster white wool with a matching hat. Margaret McChystal wears it in RKO-Radio's "ROBERTA".

HOUSE APPROVES SLUM CLEARANCE TO ASSIST RELIEF

Legislature Rises at 1.30 a.m. Today After 10-Hour Session

PROROGUE TUESDAY

Toronto, April 17 (CP)—For the first time slum clearance as a relief measure has received definite approval of the Ontario Government and the 1933 Unemployment Relief Act will contain a clause giving municipalities permission to participate in any scheme for abolition of slum areas, subject to approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Announcement of the innovation, an amendment to his Unemployment Act, was made in the Legislature early today by Minister of Welfare David Croll, when he accepted a resolution of Wilfrid Heighington, Conn. (Toronto-St. David).

Mr. Croll's introduction of the amendment came during committee discussion of the Unemployment Act shortly before Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn adjourned a 10-hour sitting of the Legislature at 1.30 o'clock this morning. At adjournment the Premier announced the Government's intention to complete the Legislative program by tomorrow night and have official prorogation next Tuesday.

Main item on the order paper, the Windsor Amalgamation Bill, designed to merge Windsor, Walkerville, East Windsor and Sandwich into a greater Windsor, effective July 1, was advanced through the committee stage despite numerous caustic attacks on the means of amalgamation.

Opposition also centred on another bill, Premier Hepburn's amendment to the Liquor Control Act, and Conservatives were equally unsuccessful in debate on third reading of the bill to eliminate a clause permitting establishment of beverage rooms in local option municipalities which have voted to establish a liquor store.

Estimates Discussed

Estimates of two departments, agriculture and that of the Attorney-General, were passed. Chief discussion arose over the government's action in closing Ontario House, at London, England, home of Ontario's Agent-General.

Early in the day the government had retained a resolution of Col. W. H. Price which urged approval of unemployment insurance legislation drafted by the federal government and the legislature carried by 64 to 17 the Premier's amendment expressing confidence in the present administration to co-operate with the Dominion and other provincial governments in establishing unemployment insurance.

Little-known history of the Kemptville Agriculture School was revealed by Minister of Agriculture Duncan Marshall during discussion of department estimates. He said before Premier Premier G. Howard Ferguson proceeded with construction of the school he consulted with him regarding agricultural schools being constructed in Alberta. Mr. Marshall visited the Eastern Ontario School at Kingston had also been located at Kemptville.

While Mr. Harry characterized closing Ontario House as "a grievous blunder," Mr. Marshall said it served no useful purpose, since marketing of the province's products could be conducted through Canada House.

Charging discrimination against Toronto, Conservatives protested against the provincial estimates not including provision for an agriculture department exhibit in the Ontario government building at the Canadian National Exhibition, Mr. Marshall said the department was not cutting down its grants to fairs and said the government's contributions to the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto disproved charges of discrimination. The Premier, He said, however, the department intended to save the $25,000 necessary for a "decent" exhibit in the government building.

He explained the destruction of the first two tables of stone by Moses in his anger at the Israelites, and of the second tables being carried in a chest or ark, known as the ark of the covenant, ahead of the Israelites as they marched to the land of Canaan. The speaker made clear the many offences we can commit that break those commandments. "Thou shalt not kill means more than just an injunction against the shedding of blood. Anger, hatred, jealousy, anything that might lead to killing are sins against this commandment. Each of the commandments was then dealt with very comprehensively by the speaker.

Sentenced For Death of Child at Avenues

The third person to be convicted of criminal negligence over the death of a child since July 1st, 1934, was given the same sentence as the first and second. The driver of the car was sentenced to two years in jail.

He had run down the girl as she was crossing the street with the light and was making a left-hand turn to go east on K.C. Avenue.

He went sobbing from the court when he heard the sentence pronounced. He had told the court that he was standing for twenty minutes before the accident.

HOPE FOR MINERS NOW ABANDONED

Rescue Party Still More Than 500 Feet From Entombed Men

Stellarton, N.S., April 17 (CP)—Grief-stricken relatives of seven doomed miners stood around the pit mouth of the Allan shaft today, while rescue workers slowly lettered their way through walls of debris toward the scene of yesterday's explosion.

More than 24 hours after the blast the volunteers were still about 50 feet from the spot, where it is seven had been entombed and all hope of finding them alive had been abandoned.

Among the volunteers were some of the 184 men, who escaped from the shaft soon after the explosion yesterday. It was their belief the missing seven could not have lived through the night. If the trapped men had survived the blast they could not have escaped the poisonous "after damp" which followed an explosion of "fire damp" in a mine.

Touching scenes were enacted at the pit mouth, when the survivors came up, to be greeted by anxious relatives. By noon yesterday 4,000 persons had gathered, and many remained far into the night awaiting news of Richard Clark, 50; Sandy Beaton 50; Abraham Hennessey, 45; Ignatz Bournlah, 42; Jack McEachern, 28 James McEachern, 30, and Ross Flemming, 48.

But there was no word as the grim battle with coal and stone continued in the depths of the mine.

How more of these happy days. You and all your family. Good health while you have it. Keep on the sunny side of life.

The greatest enemy of health is common constipation. It may cause loss of appetite and energy. Certainly it is objectionable! Yet it can be banished by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies "bulk" and vitamin B to relieve common constipation. Also iron for the blood.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. Thus much pleasanter to eat this delicious ready-to-eat cereal than to take patent medicines. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor. Made by Kellogg in London, Ont.

Royal Jubilee Cancer Fund

In the two diagnostic clinics operated by the Saskatchewan Cancer Commission during the past three years, 1,820 patients have to date been referred for consultation as suspected or diagnosed cases of cancer. Of these cases, 1,128 were diagnosed by the clinics as suffering from cancer, and at least forty-five per cent of these were too far advanced to entertain hope of cure. When it is considered that these cases were referred by physicians and that only a minor percentages were abdominal cases, we realize the accuracy of certain studies that have been published, indicating that only approximately thirty per cent of cancer patients consult their physicians at a time when cure can be hoped for.

Cancer has today assumed a place among the greatest killers on our mortality records, which demands that health authorities take action to provide some measure of control.

Not so long ago, smallpox, typhoid fever and diphtheria were the scourges that most of us feared; yet today we have these diseases under control. In other words, we can prevent them.

While, unfortunately, we have no specific preventive for cancer, data is fast piling up to indicate that the actual cause need not be known in order to save many lives and prevent much unnecessary suffering.

Dr. Joseph Colt Bloodgood of John Hopkins University, Baltimore, U.S.A., has stated that "If the information at present available regarding cancer were made use of by the public and medical profession alike, approximately 30,000 of the 120,000 deaths from cancer occurring annually in the United States could be prevented." Applying these figures to Canada, we realize that over 3,500 persons are dying each year from this disease who should have remained alive and well, and occupied their proper places in the development of our country.

The most intimate the contact one has with any programme of cancer control or with the clinical progress of cancer patients, the more one realizes the necessity for emphasis upon the statement that "early diagnosis and prompt efficient treatment are the sheet-anchor of cancer control."

Patients cannot be blamed for ignorance regarding the early signs of cancer if they have had no opportunity to learn of them, but to be made aware that there is such an appalling lack of accurate information regarding this disease should stimulate all qualified persons who are interested in human welfare to promote the general dissemination of authoritative educational material, and to provide research whereby cancer patients shall receive efficient and adequate diagnosis and treatment.

The King George V. Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund has been instituted as the Nobody Canada's thanksgiving for a quarter of a century of wise and benevolent rule, which on May 6th the whole British Empire will celebrate. All monies collected will be used for the fighting of cancer within the Dominion. If as a loyal Canadian this humanitarian service appeals to you, you can have an effective part in the national thanksgiving by sending a dollar, or as much as you can afford, to Lady Beauhrough at Government House, Ottawa, who is directly sponsoring the Fund. Your donation will be acknowledged on a special Silver Jubilee Card.

THE LOVE FLIGHT

by Jeanne Dixon

The servants' entrance! Anne slid back in her seat. No; She would tell the chauffeur she had changed her mind. Ask him to drive her back to—where? A dime in her purse. Where could she go—with a dime?

Education, position background—through the servants' entrance. Well, she would soon know how much they were worth. She soon would discover whether the round and the thought that had been spent making her into a lady were worthy and constructive effort, or a waste. She stepped from the car and followed Carl Case through an arched door into a dim hall.

"If you are interested and the opportunity presents," he said, guiding her through the dimness, "I should like to tell you more about Bois Joli and its inmates."

"Yes. Yes, of course. Soon, I hope." Loneliness had swooped down on her again, an eagle with smothering wings. If only she could find an excuse to keep Case close at hand. The stillness, the vastness, the dimness were terrifying.

"Buck up," he said. "The pressure of his fingers on her elbow was reassuring. "It's not half bad when you get the hang of it. Wait here. I'll round up a maid. There must be three or four of them lurking around somewhere."

In an interminable time—three minutes to be exact—the chauffeur was back with a maid in tow.

"Take Miss Brent to Madame," he told the maid.

"She has an appointment?"

"Madame is waiting."

"This way." The maid turned into another passageway.

"I'll be on watch in case you decide life in the Bois is not good for you," Carl Case said, sotto voce. "I'll drive you back to town."

"Please do." Anne whispered and hurried after the maid.

Anne's first impression of the interior of Bois Joli was that she was winding through a maze heavy with the perfume of flowers with a confusion of objects and vistas. She was carried upward in a bijou elevator, followed the maid through another maze.

"You come to serve Madame?" The maid stopped before doors resembling the portals to a throne room.

"I hope to serve Madame. I have been employed to assist Madame," Anne said.

"Heaven help you! She's there, behind the doors. Go through the foyer and turn to the left. You can not miss the way. And don't speak to Madame until she speaks to you."

The doors opened, noiselessly. Anne entered into such a blaze of lights that she stood still, blinking like a mole emerged into the sunlight.

"To the left," the maid hissed. Anne turned to the left, walking cautiously, jerkily. She had become a marionette.

Proceeding along the lane of dazzling light, Anne came abruptly to a hall. Ahead of her a voice boomed. A voice raucous, belligerent. A man's voice? It must be. Had she happened upon a family row? Perhaps she had better turn and exit rapidly, await a happier moment for entrance.

"But, Madame, it is the gown you asked for. The arm, lower—see, you have torn it." This voice was distinctly feminine.

"Take it off! Pull it off!" The booming voice again. "Not over my head. Down. Where's the scissors. Whack it open. Ouch! Curse scissors, I tell you!"

"Oh, Madame," protestingly. "The beautiful new gown, and so expensive."

"Whack it! Here, where it pinches. The thing is skinning me alive." A brief space and then:

"Whew! That's better. Now bring me something I can get into without doubling up like a jackknife. The pink lace with the thingumbobs on the shoulder."

"But, Madame, the pink lace is for dining."

"For dining, huh? And suppose I want to wear it for a nightgown? What have you got to say to that?"

"Nothing, Madame."

"Then see you say it. And get me the pink lace."

Despite the feeling she had that she was strung together by electric wires, which had become crossed so that her limbs would not function, Anne smiled. She could visualize the scene. It might have been lifted from a comedy. She forced herself to continue in the direction of the voices.

A dozen steps and she was in the entrance to a very large room with circular walls and domed ceiling. In the middle of the room stood the most amazing woman she had ever seen. A tall raw-boned woman with blunt features and round eyes that darted like those of an angry bird.

She thought her eyes might be playing tricks. The ensemble of medieval and modern, of architecture was the cricket color of the-car, of the chauffeur's uniform.

It was the woman's hair, though, that held Anne in thrall. Red hair. There was no other word for it. Luminous red that crackled!

The round eyes, bright and burning, darted at Anne, fastened on her.

"Who are you?" Boom! Boom! Anne's mind flashed a message of warning: "Don't let her frighten you."

CHAPTER FOUR

"I'm Anna Brent." Anne said, smiling. "I come from the Phoenix Employment Agency. I have been sent to assist your maid."

"You hear that, Bats?" The woman gloated at the maid who was gathering a mound of bright green silk from the floor. "She's come to help you. I hire servants to help my servants. Pretty soon I'll have an army of dummies. All right you—turning back to Anne—what did you say your name is?"

"Anna Brent."

"I don't like it. Anna —it's too long. You're Pitt. A name with some class to it—Pitt. All right, Pitt. Take off your hat and lets see what you can do."

Anne removed her hat, placed it with her bag on a table, Pitt did not pinch her lips together to keep the smile from breaking through.

"Now Bats, you slow Pitt where I keep my clothes. Let her pick a dress for me. I'm having company for lunch and I want to look like a human being, not like a moth frightened. Hurry!"

The maid addressed as Bats led Anne to an adjoining room as large as the circular one, lined with closets and drawers. Dexterously Bats slid back panels at one side of this room, disclosing rows of gowns hung like a spectrum in order of their colours.

"These are the day dresses, for luncheon," she told Anne, indicating the array. "Be quick or Madame will go into a temper and then you will never please her."

Swiftly Anne rifled through the collection. This one, instinct told her. A chiffon in black and white, simple, effective. She removed it from its hanger, placed it over her arm and with Bats returned to the room where Mrs. Adolph Hoag waited.

"I should choose this one, Madame," she said, holding the black and white gown out for inspection.

Madame regarded her with something like awe.

"Maybe you ain't so dumb," she said. "A man by the name of Platoo or something like that, picked it out for me himself. He keeps a dressmaking shop in Paris. Pats, bring me the pink lace."

Anne held the dress and white chiffon while Bats fled for the pink lace.

"Put the pink one on me," Madame boomed, when Bats returned. "Don't stand there gawking." Then to Anne, "There now," when the pink lace had been slipped over her head and fastened. "What's wrong with it? You don't like it. I can tell by your face. Why?"

"I do like it," Anne said quietly. "It's a very lovely gown."

"Then what are you looking so sour about? Out with it! That's what you're paid for. Speak up!"

Anne plunged.

"It doesn't become you. The shade is bad for your hair."

"You mean my hair is bad for the shade. Two pinks and they don't match. Well, it's the hair I was born with. I didn't get it out of a bottle."

Anne thinking: She's telling the truth. It's natural. I must be gracious.

"You're hair is unusual, Madame, and colorful. You should wear black and white, subdued shades for contrast. Strong colors dull and destroy the natural charm of your coloring."

"There you are, Bats. Madame was triumphant. "We got an artist in the family. Now you get busy and weed them strong ones out of the closets. Tomorrow Pitt will go to Celeste and to Reenee and the other pirates and tell 'em what's what."

"What will I do with the gowns you don't want, Madame?"

"Stick 'em in the ash barrel or give 'em to the poor or sell 'em, I don't care, so you get 'em out of my sight."

Anne stood by while Bats helped Madame into the black and white chiffon.

"I oughtta have some kind of junk around my neck." Madame was surveying herself in a fleet of mirrors. "What do you say to that, Pitt?"

"A small strand of pearls would be nice."

"Um. Bring me the smallest string you've got, Bats, and my bracelets." Madame's heavy glittering bands of diamonds and rubies and emeralds and sapphires on her elbows. Anne held her peace. The bracelets would have to go for the present.

"You're a good enough girl, Pitt," Madame remarked, "but you're too thin. Maybe you're one of the sickly ones. If you are, I'll have to get cut now. Any complaining to be done in this house I do it myself."

"My health is excellent, Madame," Anne hastened to reassure.

"Good. Then you go with Bats. She'll show you where you'll roost. Don't bother me unless I send for you. Bats gimme a lamgnitz. I hate the damn things but I've got 'em so I might as well wear 'em."

Anne's room was in the rear of the blue pile under the eaves. Its single window overlooked a stretch of garden and grass lawn. Far back, partially hidden by a screen of shrubbery, was what she supposed was the garage. A figure mutely talised from the blue background of the garage buildings and was dishouetted for a moment against the green of the shrubs.

"It's a cozy little room—a bit warm, don't you think?" she said to Bats. She had accosted the maid's sudden warm flush in her cheeks, in case Bats, too, had been looking out of the window and would guess the reason.

"This side of the house is cool in the afternoon," Bats said. "You'll be on duty from one to the left. If you want anything knock on the door and if I'm not there leave a note and I'll call you when I come back. Madame is going out to tea later. She said send for you. Your uniforms will be up later. You may have to take them in some, you be ing thinner than most."

Anne was alone. Second maid to Mrs. Adolph Hoag. In her room in the servant's quarters of Bois Joli, Palm Beach, Florida. This was to be her home for how long she did not know. Snug little nest. Thank heaven the blue brush had spared her this room, a good bed, ample with gay cretonne covers to match the curtains; a tiny writing desk; two chairs, one cushioned, with a reading lamp beside it; a small dresser with a vase for flowers on its glassed top. Compared with her last cell and decrepit room in a boarding house where she had found haven when her funds ran so low she must practice the most stringent of economies, this room was luxury.

She went to the window. The blue figure down by the garage was nowhere in sight. But the knowledge that she might look out at any time and find it there brought such a warmth to Anne's heart that she had brought only the clothes she wore. Perhaps Carl Case would help her bring them—there must be a laundry room or a small truck for general use.

At one o'clock Bats came to take Anne to lunch.

"We do not eat until after Madame has finished dressing for luncheon," Bats explained, "The others are in the servants' dining room with the upper servants—the butler, the chefs, the mad master's man, the housekeeper. The food is the best and of good quality. We are allowed delicacies from the main tables—the king that don't keep—ices, soufflés, fruit cakes and such like."

Suddenly Anne realized that the gnawing in her stomach, the bright spots dancing before her eyes were hunger pains.

"That will be splendid," she said, taking Bats' arm. "I'm famished this minute."

"The under servants don't do so well," Bats went on. "They have to eat mostly stews and left-overs. They're always grumbling and stealing things from the kitchen."

"They shouldn't," Anne said with conviction. "We're lucky to eat all these days. Stews are better than bread lines."

Bats and Anne sat at one end of a long table in a narrow room. A maid who had shown Anne to Madame when she first arrived, served them. Her name was Berta and she was responsible for how long she did not know. Snug little nest. Thank heaven the blue brush had spared her this room, a good bed, ample with gay cretonne covers to match the curtains; a tiny writing desk; two chairs, one cushioned, with a reading lamp beside it; a small dresser with a vase for flowers on its glassed top. Compared with her last cell and decrepit room in a boarding house where she had found haven when her funds ran so low she must practice the most stringent of economies, this room was luxury.

She went to the window. The blue figure down by the garage was nowhere in sight. But the knowledge that she might look out at any time and find it there brought such a warmth to Anne's heart that she had brought only the clothes she wore. Perhaps Carl Case would help her bring them—there must be a laundry room or a small truck for general use.

At one o'clock Bats came to take Anne to lunch.

"We do not eat until after Madame has finished dressing for luncheon," Bats explained, "The others are in the servants' dining room with the upper servants—the butler, the chefs, the mad master's man, the housekeeper. The food is the best and of good quality. We are allowed delicacies from the main tables—the king that don't keep—ices, soufflés, fruit cakes and such like."

Suddenly Anne realized that the gnawing in her stomach, the bright spots dancing before her eyes were hunger pains.

"That will be splendid," she said, taking Bats' arm. "I'm famished this minute."

"The under servants don't do so well," Bats went on. "They have to eat mostly stews and left-overs. They're always grumbling and stealing things from the kitchen."

"They shouldn't," Anne said with conviction. "We're lucky to eat all these days. Stews are better than bread lines."

Orders from Parents May Be Puzzling

By LISA GRENELLE

"Don't tease the cat, Jimmy," George, you mustn't make personal remarks, it isn't polite," "If your table manners don't improve, Janie, I shan't take you to Aunt Sarah's."

And still Jimmie went on teasing the cat; George continued to make personal remarks, and Janie's table manners continued appalling.

What was wrong with these children Were they naturally spoiled and disobedient? Had they no respect for the parents? Perhaps they just forgot. But it sounds like poor discipline somewhere, doesn't it

As a matter of fact, however, it wasn't, not in any one of the three cases. None of the three children was naturally disobedient, stubborn, or absent-minded. They simply didn't quite understand what was expected of them.

Jimmie had understood that teasing meant chasing an animal about. It also seemed to include pulling its tail. So Jimmie refrained from teasing the cat and pulling her tail, and took to pulling her ears and hugging her instead

Told Teasing Was Cruel

Jimmie had been told that teasing was cruel and bad. Surely exhibiting a perfectly genuine affection for the cat by hugs and hearty pats could not come under the head of anything bad and cruel. It could not be considered teasing.

But apparently Jimmy's demonstrations of affection did come under the head of teasing after all, judging from the severe reprimand he received from his father. Jimmie, retired, hurt, and puzzled, more mystified than ever as to what was included in the word teasing.

It was the same with George and his personal remarks. Although he had been reproached by various members of the family for months for speaking his thoughts aloud, it was not yet clear to him what constituted a personal remark. George finally decided it meant an insult, such a his spoken opinion of the length of Aunt Sarah's nose. Aunt Sarah evidently did not like the length of her nose remarked upon. She considered it an insult.

So George was very careful not to remark on the length of people's noses in front of them, or to say anything at all unpleasant.

George Was Puzzled

But when he complimented his sister's friend, Alida, on her pretty teeth at the lunch table, the whole family came down on him with: "How many times, George, have we told you not to make personal remarks !"

And Janie ran into the same problem. She learned that chewing with your mouth open was bad table manners, as was putting her elbows on the table. So she did her best to conform. She chewed with her mouth shut, elbows off the table, only to find the family still reproached her for her bad table manners. Apparently her bad manners included a lot of other things.

If you expect your children to respect your laws, you must make them clear. Because a child can talk does not mean he understands the full meaning of many words. Only when you are sure the child understands your order in its every and all inclusive sense can you expect him to obey it.

STYLES IN "ROBERTA"

Shimmering white satin and rich silver lace are combined in this bewitching evening gown worn by Margaret McChrystal, manager in RKO-Radio's musical hit, "ROBERTA". The jacket features the popular high neck line.

Exodus and Passover

The Mosaic Law enjoins repeatedly and very solemnly the duty upon the Hebrew people to remember the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, never to forget that they were slaves in that land, and that the Almighty redeemed them with a strong hand and an outstretched arm. The revelation on Mount Sinai begins with this memorial. The Sabbath Commandment refers to it. The Passover feast was especially instituted, "That thou mayest remember the day of thy going out of the land of Egypt all the days of thy life"; this "all the days of thy life" one of the ancient sages understood to signify, we should be reminded of that event day and night, others saw in it much more than that, they understood these words to command or prophesy that the memorial of the exodus from Egypt shall never be forgotten. The importance of that event in the life and religion of Israel is evident.

Why is it? The reply to this query is many-sided. The first is, that a nation was born on that memorable day; it was the natal day of the first independent nation constituted upon the principles of liberty and equality—Israel was born, the first people that started into existence with a Declaration of Independence and the proclamation of liberty and equality, and was solemnly enjoined, never to forget for a moment the principle which is the cause of its national existence, the end and aim of its political organization, the first message to humanity it was required to proclaim, the first program in words and deeds. Therefore the Passover is called in Israel's liturgy the time of our liberation.

This is not of political importance only. It is also of the highest moral importance. Freedom is the indispensable conditions of goodness, virtue, purity and holiness. The free man can only be virtuous, moral and honorable. Take away freedom from human nature and whatever remains of it is an anomaly, some nameless thing of human form and animal indifference.

Truly so, says the psychologist, all this is in human nature without the memorial of the exodus which seems to be a superfluous symbol. As a matter of fact, as long as history records man struggled for liberty, and so he struggles yet. He struggled and prevailed, he struggled and failed, only to renew the combat again. Independence, liberty and equality are the watchwords in the combat, the painful struggles of humanity in the process of history. It is combat struggle and defeat all the time. Why is this? Simply because on the success of humanity feels and maintains that freedom is man's birthright. Another holds that man is a being that must be tamed, managed, ruled and kept in subjection, and there is none to decide which is right and which is wrong position. Therefore history is a series of drawn battles between the two armies and none has as yet spoken the last word, which is right and which is wrong.

The only decision handed down from the highest court, in favor of freedom, liberty and equality is the divine revelation, the manifestation of the Almighty in the exodus of Israel from Egypt as liberation from bondage. In that event Israel's God-given brain that God spoke in favor of freedom, the Almighty decided the vexatious question. Therefore I think all the miracles narrated in connection with the exode were originally intended to declare and to prove that God did so, God thus made known His will to His children that man should be free, as the prophet verily declares, "the fear of Jehovah is its treasury," the religious belief of Israel in that exode is the treasury of freedom, this is its evidence, its divine support, its eternal rock. Therefore that Thorah again and again enjoins upon us not to forget, never to forget "the day of thy going out from the land of Egypt all the days of thy life."

O.A.C. PRESIDENT DENIES STATEMENT

Guelph, April 17—(CP)—Dr. G. I. Christie, president of Ontario Agricultural College, today began investigation of the five Kitchener girls were ill-treated, when they visited the college last Sunday.

He withheld comment on the re- ports the faces of two of the girls had been painted with iodine, and that the other girls were taken in one of the buildings, forced to strip and parade in a darkened room, while a flashlight played on them.

"I don't know a thing about it, but I am calling a conference," said Dr. Christie. "Inquiries I have made at my office since I came back only five minutes ago reveal absolutely nothing regarding the matter."

HOWARD WHEELER LOSES DECISION BUT A GAMESTER

Crowd Applauds Local Boxer in Bout With Genovese

CRAWFORD PLEASES

Spectators Did Not Agree With Awards As Announced

TORONTO, April 17.—(CP)—The Central Canada bone boxing championships last night provided plenty of action and excitement. For four and a quarter hours officials of the Central Branch of the A.A.U. of C. kept the squared circle alive with action as boxers ranging from flyweight to light-heavyweight clashed for the Golden Gloves titles.

In all there were 19 bouts. Eddie Hutchinson of the Class A.C. and Alex Ward of the St. James A.C. were awarded the championships in the paperweight and heavyweight honors by default. Neither had to appear in action.

A midget-sized pocket of boxing fans from Belleville, Howard Wheeler, was the sensation of the evening. Tossed and hooked on upset when he won his first start against Mel Ghionna of the Elm Grove Club, a crafty veteran, who has been the "Pops" in the Toronto rings for years. In the third and final round, Ghionna found he couldn't hit the mark with his punches and couldn't understand why the judges gave the decision to the boy from town lad.

In the final of the featherweight division met at the ringside voted in favor of Joe Genovese, of the Elm Grove Club, although the fans thought Wheeler had enough of an advantage to get the nod.

Another decision that proved unpopular with the spectators was that in the lightweight division when Ernie Susanda, Elm Grove, was awarded the verdict over Bill Crawford, another Belleville lad.

"Spider" Armstrong, flyweight title-holder, showed plenty of ability and ringcraft as he punished Rob Dockerty, Fairbank A.C. In the final of the 113-pound division, Jack Dockerty, brother of Rob, upheld the reputation of the family with an aggressive display which saw him come from behind to beat Dave Murray of the Mount Pleasant A.C. for the bantamweight championship.

Sammy Loftspring, who stepped from the 126-pound class into the welterweight, won this title without a great deal of trouble. The hard-hitting Jewish lad was too clever for Reid Schmals of Kitchener, who proved himself a willing mixer, if nothing else. Irving Pease, Maple Leaf A.C., outclassed "Curly" Duncan, Mount Pleasant A.C. to annex the middleweight title.

George Selkirk Is Making Good For the Yankees

BY WILLARD KEEFE

New York, April 17 (AP)—George Selkirk can tell you today how it feels to come home for the first time to a housetul of wrangling stepchildren.

As the successor of Babe Ruth in rightfield for the New York Yankees, the husky Canadian kindled a feud in the bleachers, when the Yankees opened their season against the Boston Red Sox.

Mosey, a holdover in a parklike overcoat, led the anti-Selkirk or pro-Ruth faction; a new chap in a cheesemaker, later identified as Phil, captained the defenders of the Numberfive, boy.

The early "hi, George's" that greeted Selkirk's friendliest assault But as cold and the certainty of defeat sharpened, the tempers of sponsors for the last Ruth, the outfielder was saluted with cheerlessness that was a "shame to any suburban."

Phil leaped up with shriek of triumph, and indicated the scorn-board. It heralded a first inning score of Braves 2; Giants 0.

"A lot of help you got, pal Ruth is to the Braves, ain't he?" Phil taunted Mosey.

Mosey revealed out of a draft into his parka.

"Wait," he said.

Selkirk grounded weakly to the Red Sox pitcher.

"There's your hitter," said Mosey. The invisible fingers behind the score board hailed the Braves leading the Giants 2-0 at the end of the first inning. Mosey whooped in ecstacy.

"Babe kissed one," he yelled. "Or he will! A dollar says so."

Phil's dollar said: "No."

"Hey!" Mosey directed the peanut vendor, "find out what happened in Boston."

"That's what happened," announced the vendor, arriving at his latter. "Babe smacked one in the fifth, one on, Could we use him today?"

"I don't know, why I came out here," Phil confessed. "I started getting fired and I froze a foot and saw Gomez get his game. But don't fool yourself, Mosey, this Selkirk's got something."

SEASON ALREADY OLD FOR "DIZZY"

(By Paul Mickelson)

Chicago, April 17 (AP)—The baseball season already is old for that great man of the pitching hill, Jerome "Dizzy" Dean.

Although the 1935 campaign was only a day old today, Dizzy already has had more experiences, attracted more attention and furnished more headline copy than many hard plugging players do in a lifetime of toil.

He has been fined $100 for missing a train.

He has been on the carpet before Kenesaw Mountain Landis, Commissioner of baseball.

He has been mowed down by a batted ball and rushed with all the dramatic flourishes to a hospital.

So, all Dizzy has left to do to retain his headline average for the year is to win 30 games again for the St. Louis Cardinals and repeat his World Series glory in the fall.

Dizzy's left leg was sore today. A kid red sock showed where it had been painfully bruised from a line drive off Freddie Lindstrom's bat.

CLEANSE your Kidneys
—as well as your house

Just as your household may need Spring cleaning, so your kidneys need similar attention. Winter takes toll of your energy—Spring usually finds you with weakened and impure blood. Healthy kidneys filter the impurities out of your blood—that is their natural function. If they fail, poisons gather and illness follows. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best Spring tonic. They restore the kidneys to normal action. Your system is cleansed and invigorated by a full supply of pure, rich blood. Don't neglect your kidneys.

KEN EDGECOMBE ELECTED PREXY SOFTBALL LOOP

Four Teams Definitely in Loop For Coming Season

NAME DELEGATES

Will Consider Bringing in Outside Clubs For League

Ken Edgecombe was elected to the office of president of the Belleville Senior Softball League at their annual meeting and election of officers in the Aahmas Club rooms last evening. An entire new slate of officers was elected with the exception of the office of Vice-President Maurice Callaghan being returned to that office.

Four teams definitely intimated their would affiliate with the local softball loop in 1935—College Hill Cubs, Aahmas Club, Almitts and South End A.C., being officially represented, while the matter of the return to softball activities of the Tin Too Talkers was not assured although the latter was officially represented, but refused to affiliate last evening.

During the evening's agenda, the matter of allowing outside teams, such as Tweed and Bancroft, was thoroughly discussed, but no definite conclusion arrived at as the league decided to leave the matter in abeyance until the next regular meeting of the loop, nothing definite action opened on the question of a possible junior softball loop, but the meeting felt, that the XI-Y Aeleens was doing a yeoman service in this line and voted that the question down. The local league felt, that the "abolition" of amateur cards in the O.A.S.A. should be adopted, but owing to the fact that the annual meeting of the provincial body was being held on Friday and the question of amendments had not closed, the matter was referred back until the semi-annual meeting of the local league next autumn.

The annual report of the secretary and the treasurer was read and adopted, finding the loop on a sound basis throughout the year. The meeting of the league will be held on April 30th, directly following the annual meeting of the O.A.S.A. The following were named as delegates to the annual provincial meeting, two having voting power—Harry Rollins, Chas. Crosbie, N. Edecombe, Gerald Vance and M. Callaghan. The by-laws governing of the league the Rednerville and Tweed teams will be asked to be present and state their intentions in reference to financial arrangements.

The election of officers resulted as follows—President, Ken Edgecombe, Vice-President, M. Callaghan; Auditors, N. Wilbur and J. Allin. The team delegates to the meeting evening were—Almille, R. Covert, J. Allin; S.E.A.C., Crosbie, Jeffs; College Hill C. Barnett and G. Barrager; Aahmas A. C., H. Rawden and W. Frv; Tin Tops, Gerald Vance and N. Wilbur; Tweed, Harry Rollins, Rednerville was not represented last evening.

President H. Rollins, upon his retirement, thanked the league and all connected with its activities for the loyal support in 1934, but regretted his inability to act in an official capacity during 1935.

EDMONTON GRADS ON WAY EAST

Will Play Windsor-Walkerville Alumnae For Title

Edmonton, April 17.—(CP)—Percy Page's Edmonton Commercial Grads headed eastward today to make their first Canadian Basketball title defence in Ontario since 1927, when they went to Toronto for four games of the lakesides. This time they will face Windsor-Walkerville Alumnae.

The Page Girls left here last night with nine players. The first game of the Championship Series will be played Saturday night at Windsor.

The 1935 Grads, as high a scoring brigade as any of the 10 on the list that Page has kept on top of the heap, are made up of four veterans, two players who joined the world champions in 1934 and three freshmen. There is a feeling, too, that tall Noel MacDonald will turn out to be one of the greatest women players the east has ever seen.

JIMMY McLARNIN ACCEPTS BOUT

Fights Barney Ross in Rubber Bout on May 28th

VANCOUVER, April 17.— (CP)— Welterweight Champion Jimmy McLarnin will leave here tomorrow for Los Angeles, enroute to New York where he will defend his title against Chicago's Barney Ross on May 28. Jimmy received confirmation last night the bout had been arranged, from his manager, Pop Foster, now in New York.

"Why don't I try for a knockout in the first round?" Jimmy repeated a reporter's question. "That's the idea. It would save a lot of fooling around; but it takes two to make a knockout and I don't think Barney would co-operate."

MASONRY IS FOE OF SELFISHNESS

District Deputy W. C. Mikel States at Madoc Lodge

The Masonic Lodge at Madoc received an official visit from R.W. Bro. W. C. Mikel, D.D.G.M. on Tuesday evening.

Visiting brethren were present from the lodges at Belleville, Marmora, Frankford, Stirling, Trenton and other sections. After the close of the lodge, a banquet was tendered by the lodge in the spacious dining hall of the Madoc Temple. Toasts to the King and the Craft, Grand Lodge, and visitors were proposed.

In responding to the toast to Grand Lodge, the D.D.G.M. made reference to the building of King Solomon's temple on Mount Moriah Jerusalem, thirty centuries ago which the first Grand Lodge was organized, consisting of three thousand Master Masons. He traced the movements of the twelve tribes of Israel including the two tribes of Levi and Judah, and the tribe of Benjamin and the other nine tribes usually spoken of as the lost ten tribes, and referred to the various prophecies describing them, which description fits the people of the British Empire. He showed that it was in Britain where Free Masonry, under the descendants of these people first gave expression in the form of lodges, which became consolidated into the Grand Lodge of England in 1717. It was from the English Grand Lodge that the Grand Lodge in Ontario received its origin.

He said that if Free Masonry were to disappear today the world would lose one of its greatest influences for good. It was one of the chief antagonists of selfishness and selfishness has incited every evil, non-essential to happiness and started every war.

The origin and development of Free Masonry in British Dominions and the United States was one of the phenomenon of the world. During the period over which Free Masonry has extended, thousands of organizations have come into existence, flourished for a time and died, but Free Masonry continues.

While Free Masonry does not claim to be a religion or to be of Divine origin, it nevertheless seems to have received Divine approbation.

The Free Masons of the Madoc district will attend the Masonic Church parade at Belleville on Sunday, June 23rd.

70 YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY BANQUET

Miss Jones Addresses Gathering at Rednersville

Seventy members and guests of the Rednersville United Church Young People's Society enjoyed a banquet and social evening in the church hall last evening. The event signified the closing of the society for the year 1934-35.

Miss Hazel Smith, President of the society, acted as chairman. The following program was put on by the members of the society and invited guests. Mr. Frank Walkom rendered a vocal number, Mollie, and replied to by Rev. Mr. Mullen, pastor of the Rednersville United Church. Toast to the guests, proposed by Mr. Gerald Thompson, replied to by Mr. Gerald Anderson.

Mr. Frank Wilder gave a guitar solo with ukulele accompaniment. Reading, "The Inventor's Wife" by Mrs. Redner. Reading "The Prairie Heroine" by Mr. Charles Draeup.

The guest speaker of the evening was Miss Jones of Rednersville. She was introduced by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Mullen. Miss Jones had chosen for her topic "Experience gained through travel."

Miss Jones is a trained nurse and she therefore takes a great deal of interest in the human side of life and especially takes great interest in young people. She has traveled extensively in the course of her work and most of the states in that great country to the south of us have been traversed by her, Europe and even Mexico have come under the scope of her journies. Filled with great wit and humour she captivated the minds of the audience throughout her lecture about the experience gained through the hard knocks of life.

"The one thing in life that influences young people is a great leader", said the speaker. One might notice an automobile with the most up to date contraptions. It can climb hills and has great power, but it lacks one thing, that is a driver. Insane people have perfect physical bodies and they lack one thing, their minds do not function correctly. "You young people before me," said Miss Jones, "do not lack in this respect. You have the power to reason things out. Why not have your life influenced by a great leader. That great leader is the Lord Jesus Christ."

The one great word that Miss Jones learned throughout her travels was the word "serve". She has derived great pleasure in serving other people and also the Master. In closing Miss Jones left this thought with the young people.

The enjoyable evening's entertainment closed with the repeating of the Mizpah Benediction.

Howard Wheeler, local mitteter, was the medal boxer to win a decision at the Maple Leaf Gardens last night, but, eventually Wheeler was defeated in the finals of the 126-pound class by no less a person than Joe Genovese, Toronto's outstanding fighter in the lighter classes, The remaining local scrappers were eliminated in the preliminaries, but Wheeler defeated Mel Gibson, the Toronto Italian boy, to elevate himself into the finals against Genovese. Promoter Glen Allen opened negotiations to bring four or five good Toronto boys down to Belleville in the near future, while he was in Toronto yesterday.

Only four teams outwardly intimated that they would definitely start in the local softball loop this year, Hill Cubs, Alumax Club, Alemite and South End A. C. being the only teams to assert their intentions. Jack Wilson's Tip Tops were represented, but refused to affiliate as yet. Doubtless the "Tailors" will be in the swim, however. The matter of allowing Tweed and Redeemville in the league was left in abeyance after Ken Edgecombe was elected President.

For the past two days Lorne Chabot, star goalie of the Chicago Black Hawks, has been in Belleville on business. Chabot was voted the most valuable goalkeeper in the N. H. L. during the past season, but is now back at work with the home folks in Toronto. Lorne was quite interested in the outcome of the Port Arthur-Belleville Hill Cup game as he at one time tended to the goal-keeping for the Ports when they won the Allan Cup. "From what information I can find out, it looks as though the Ports are a little too light for the "Bobcats," he said. Lorne Chabot was a teammate of Albert Pudas, now coach of the Ports and Hill, L'Heureux, ex-coach of the local Cities Service Club, when the Ports won the Allan Cup back in 1925 and '26. Chabot turned professional, but Pudas and L'Heureux stayed with the Ports long enough to win a third Allan Cup in 1928. Incidentally the first person Chabot asked for was Hill. L'Heureux he having visited Mr. L'Heureux here in Belleville two years ago last fall, but previous to his being traded by the Maple Leafs to the Montreal Canadiens, Chabot is on the road for the Acme people and has this district to cover.

The season of organizing softball leagues is at hand. Over in Trenton the softball moguls are going to try a Trenton and District League something similar to their hockey league. They will take in such surrounding centres as Carrying Place, Brighton, Frankford, etc. Here in town the local Inter-Church S. S. softball loop swings into action to invite all churches into the fold. Last season this loop enjoyed a most successful season, but this year intend to be more strict in the matter of teams being forced to use actual registered Sunday School scholars as the league is organized solely for their benefit. Three groups, junior, senior and intermediate will be sponsored. Dan Stewart, 322 Front Street, is in possession of the entry blanks and interested persons should apply to him.

Hugh Brown was recently re-elected as President of the Oshawa C.O.B.L., entry that is to be sponsored by the Dominion Brewing Co. The "Brewers", "Beer Barons" or what not recently met and will send delegates to the C.O.B.L. meeting here on May 4th, thus indicating that the Oshawa entry has forsaken its threat of withdrawing from the league if player May's certificate was not issued before July 1st. Unless we are mistaken, however, the C.O.B.L. will take up the question of May's certificate and endeavour to have it passed in due time. The 1935 Oshawa club will be outfitted with new uniforms and considerably equipped by their new sponsors. Our good friend, H. Campbell, sports editor of the Oshawa Times, was named on the new executive. (Don't ever do that George, it just ain't bein' done and besides, it's too much darn work for a sports writer.)

The scene is all set for tonight's anglers' open forum meeting at the City Hall, when Tom Jull and Bill Lang, two veteran exponents of the art will be speaking from the Toronto Anglers' Association, will be the guest artists. Besides treating with reference to re-stocking and the conservation of game fish, these two expert casters may give exhibitions of casting. Moving pictures will also be shown.

The latest rumour coming out of Peterboro is to the effect that the Petes are about to load up with hockey players for the 1935-36 season. Sometime ago it was stated that Roy Covert was slated to move northward and turn his hockey attentions towards playing for the Petes. Although he has not forsaken his local abode as yet it is almost safe in wagering some of the tea in China, that Covert will be cavorting at mid-ice for the Petes next season. The rumour says the Petes may pass to the senior OHA series along with Oshawa, but the Motor City moguls are casting longing eye at the senior O.H.A. series along with Oshawa, but the Motor City moguls are casting longing eye at the senior O.H.A. series as well. ## Aging Ruth Holds Spotlight As Major Leagues Square Off For Long Grind Down Stretch

Opening Attendance Cut Down by Unseasonable Weather

DEAN IS INJURED

Hit by Line Drive on Leg And Will be Out For Week

(By Herbert W. Barker)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Old Father Time, it appears, will be lucky to get even a draw with George Herman Ruth.

Overshadowing all other developments as the Major League baseball season got away to a halting start in frigid weather yesterday were the amazing exploits of the porcily aging Babe.

The injury to Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, remarkable pitching by a half dozen established stars, heavy batting at Cincinnati and Philadelphia—all these faded into the background as the mighty Ruth, called into the National League to lead Boston Braves out of the financial wilderness, squared accounts with Carl Hubbell, sleider, southpaw of the New York Giants.

Facing the left-hander for the first time, since the All-Star game last summer when he went down, batting, in a third strike, Ruth smacked Hubbell for a single and a home run to account for all the Braves' runs in a 4-3 victory over the Giants. That was what 25,000 fans had braved pneumonia to see and the Babe didn't let them down. They had expected however, the 41-year-old home run master to star afield but his sensational gloved-hand catch of Hubbell's line liner in the fifth saved Ed Brandt and the Braves some embarrassment. Brandt, by the way, gave up only five hits but it was definitely the Babe's Day.

Dean Carried Off Field

At Chicago, the world champion St. Louis Cardinals saw their pennant aspirations almost cease to grief on the first day of the campaign. A line drive from Freddy Lindstrom's bat struck Dizzy Dean on the left leg, just above the ankle, in the first inning, and the great right-hander was carried off the field. An X-ray later failed to disclose any broken bones but the Dizzy one probably will be out for a week nursing a severe bruise.

The Cubs nicked Dizzy for one run before he was rendered hors de combat, added two more and had Tinning in the second and second, what proved to be the winning runs in a 4-3 victory off Ray Harrell in the eighth.

Rounding out the full National League program, Pittsburgh Pirates concentrated a 14-hit attack in the 2 big innings to whip the Cincinnati Reds, 12-6, while Wally Berger and the Reds pretty well in control, much to the displeasure of 37,000 fans at Philadelphia, where the Phillies saw Brooklyn Dodgers shell the Phillies, 13-3 behind Van Mungo's five-hit pitching.

American League

The biggest crowd of the day, 29,567, swarmed into Yankee Stadium to see a brilliant pitching duel between Wes Ferrell, veteran right-hander of Boston Red Sox and Vernon (Goofy) Gomez, slim southpaw of the Yankees.

Ferrell, in mid-season form, gave the Ruth-less Yankees only two hits, faced only 29 men and won 1-0. Gomez, losing to the Red Sox for the first time in 7 years, was nicked for only six hits but an error by Lou Gehrig permitted the winning run to score in the sixth.

The only other American League game produced another pitching duel at St. Louis between Mel Harder of Cleveland Indians and Buck Newsom of the Browns. Glen Myatt's double finally broke this up with a double in the 14th that gave the Indians a 3-2 triumph. Harder allowed only eight hits. Newsom twelve.

Odd weather deferred the baseball rurals at Detroit, with the champion Tigers entertaining the Athletics at Whitesox, and at Washington, with the Senators playing host to the Philadelphia Athletics, scheduled. A third opening today, weather permitting, will find Clackmaker entering his series with Pittsburgh to the Pirates' Forbes Field, Pittsburgh.

The aggregate attendance for yesterday's six opening games was 101,667 as compared with 128,852 for eight games a year ago. The four National League contests drew 70,800 as against 104,117 a year ago. The two games in the American League drew 29,767 as against 82,336 for four in 1934.

Aajmaa Athletic Weekly Chronicle

At a recent meeting of the Club's Executive Ed. Goodier and Bill Fry were appointed to attend a meeting of the O.A.A.A. in Toronto on Friday the 19th, to see if they would organize a bigger and better loop in this district for 1935 and to see that the teams keep their schedules and do not be postponed at any time like they did last year. Tell you more about it next week.

The President has ordered the club's softball sweaters so we will have them on hand in time for the Street League. The sweaters are like the Chicago Black Hawks only in the club's colors of purple and gold with Aajmaa across the front in gold block letters. These colors make the sweaters stand right out from in front of any other softball sweaters we have seen in quite awhile.

The club's Commodore is as busy as any man in the club getting the boats into shape so they will be ready for the paddlers. He has a crew of four consisting of A. Little, L. Marsden, B. Baker and Jack Murphy. He believes that they will be an outstanding crew for the Black trophy in the C.C.A. He has an experienced paddler in K. Grider who won the C.C.A. in 1930, 1931, and 1932. Double blade Singles for the Island Aquale. He also won in the British Empire Games at Hamilton in 1930. In 1934 he was at the International at the Toronto Exhibition.

A WANT-AD will FIND IT!

The Bicycle with the STRAIGHT LINE DRIVE
THE TWO WHEELS TRACK LIKE ONE RUNS FASTER STEERS EASIER
BALANCES PERFECTLY

ONE of the big reasons why you should choose a C.C.M. is because of its Straight Line Drive.
To produce the C.C.M. Straight Line Drive, all of the parts of the bicycle must be made with watch-like precision. Then they must be put together so accurately that, when the final "truing up" of the bicycle occurs, the front and rear wheels, and front and rear sprockets line up truly.
It is not uncommon to find ordinary bicycles with a difference of from one-half to three inches in the tracking of front and rear wheels. You can realize just how far short such bicycles fall from having a Straight Line Drive.
With a bicycle that doesn't track perfectly, that runs a little "off center", that "creeps" slightly to left or right, undue friction is set up that is a waster of the power put into the pedalling, as well as shortening the life of the tires.
With C.C.M.'s precision-built Straight Line Drive all the pressure you put on the pedals goes to drive your bicycle straight ahead. And, besides making your C.C.M. run easier, the Straight Line Drive also makes your C.C.M. easier to steer and easier to balance.
All C.C.M. models have frames of seamless steel tubing; Endrick or enamelled steel rims; rustless steel spokes; bright parts Chromium plated over C.C.M.'s 20-year Nickel, insuring a brilliance that lasts; powerful C.C.M. Hercules coaster brake; Dunlop Fort or Dunlop Imperial Tires.
These 1935 values are outstanding for bicycles of the famous C.C.M. quality

Poems for Sale

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Poetry is—let us say it right off the bat—a drug on the market. Everyone who is able to dig down in his jeans and bring up sixty cents can buy a rhyming dictionary, and, opening it at random, can get such inspiration as ethicize, italicize, classicize, grammaticize and stanicize will offer. Incidentally, that last listed word means: "to make or become Chinese." If you hadn't read this you'd a-never known.

Anyway George Carstrom lived in Greenwich Village. He came from Powderley, O., a fact (some years ago. At that time he had one-fifty and bought a rhyming dictionary. He also bought a flowing necktie, which he later discard, not wanting to be taken for an artist. He had pride.

At first, he admitted his poetry wasn't such as to make Milton or Shakespeare fear for their fame. He had a propensity for rhyming apologies with prologies and moon with June. All right in their places, without question but rather difficult—the first two of working into a serious poem. The second two, too.

However, after a year or so of rejection slips he started to contribute to magazines perpetrated in the Village. One such editor, nameless for the sake of his future, heralded him as "the reincarnation of Milton, Homer and Lord Byron." Which last was a libel.

But he—George—got his name in print. And in the flush of this great achievement, fell in love with Mildred du Lacorne—nee Maggy Jones. Mlle. du Lacorne had taken the name because Jones "is so common, and one should express his personality by nomenclature," or something like that.

From Nevada

Mildred—nee Maggy—came from Kitty Creek, Nevada. She was a writer of free stuff. Also unpublished until she found the Village magazines her as a successor to George Eliot."

We said George fell in love with Mildred. And vice versa. She fell in love the way Maggy Jones would fall in love—dreams of George coming home from work, a youngster, a small flat and a reading supper all ready for him. Golly, how oft do our instincts play heck with our art!

However, George was of sterner stuff.

"I'm a poet," said he, "and I've the world to conquer."

Meanwhile, they got married and pooled their resources for a two-room basement apartment with hot water and a bath that seldom knew it.

Myl-Maggy quickly gave up writing serious stuff and devoted herself to George, who spent hours thumbing his rhyming dictionary for such words as priapism, slaughish, waggish, etc., et cetera. He made 'em into poems.

And he carried them—cheaper mustamp—around to magazines which paid cash. He generally brought them back. As was initiated in the first paragraph, the poetry market is glutted.

One day he came home angry. "A fellow offered me a job driving a truck", he stormed.

Maggy soothed him.

"He didn't know you were a poet," she said.

Now, let's leap ahead a few months. Maggy grew quiet. She didn't move around so much. She sat long hours thoughtfully. She had periods of "the blues" that George could not understand, although he tried to understand.

And the one day, he understood . . . understood it the very day the same would-be employer repeated his offer of a job driving a truck.

Maggy's Problem

"Golly" said George, sweatsuck. He hadn't thought that THAT was what made Maggy blue and thoughtful and quiet . . . , she thought rather stemmed him.

Clumsily, he put his arms around her.

"I'll love you forever," he whispered, and went back to his poetry. But his rhyming was lousy, even with the gaping dictionary before him. His thoughts constantly went back to that proffered job... At last, however, he got an inspiration... and filled it "Wanderlust." He wrote rapidly:

"A fitful demon in my breast
Decrees that I shall never rest.
He sends my heart on fruitless quest—
But keeps me bound
To Duty's round.

"To distant places I would go—
To Asia's wastes, to Arctic snow,
And down to watch the Rio flow—
But I remain,
Strong is the chain,

"I yearn to match the eagle's flight,
And wail the end of Northern night
My heart decrees this is my right,
But I must stay
While others stray.

"I cannot cut the circling strands
That hold me from outlandish lands,
For love as strong as baby hands,
Have laid in dust
My wanderlust."

He noticed approvingly when it was completed.

"If this doesn't sell, I'll take that job," he told Maggy. And then he laughed. "I'll have to, with a family to raise." And, strangely, he rather hoped no one would buy.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was setting supper, being stake under onions, and ma said to pop, Nobody can say I haven't a feeling nature, William. Of course I dont mean I'd go to the length of derickulus extremes. I mean, I dont claim I'd actually feed the hand that bit me, but I'm certainly willing to go half way when it come to a question of letting bygones be bygones, and that's what I told Maud Neva this afternoon when she asked me if I'd mind if she invited that double faced tongued Eartha Cornhouse to her bridge next Saltiday, ma said.

Do you mean your going to berry the haichet and be frends again? pop said, and ma said, We never were frends, at least she never was my frend, as I long ago discovered to my sorrow, and as far as berrying the hatchet goes she'd cheerfully berry it in my head like a red Indian on a war path. In other words, I have no illusions about her but just see her in a calm detached way as she really is with all her faults and blemishes, ma said.

That's very broad minded of you, pop said, and ma said, Well, after all, people cant help being the way nature made them. I hope I'm charitable enough to realize that, and that's the very remark, I made to Maud Neva. So I'm perfectly willing, I said to Maud to put my pride in my pocket and swallow it and so half way locks a reconcilation, I told Maud, if Bertha Cornhouse is open minded enough to beg my full pardon and admit she's been a conliuous snake in the grass, then I'll be open minded enough to accept her apology, I told Maud, ma said.

Yee gods, pop said, and ma said, Why, what's a matter pop? ma said. You're too easy. Why dont you make her hand you a written apology sworn to before a Justice of the peace? he said, and ma said, Well after all I'm willing to allow her to go a little more than half way, dont you think?

Pop bend in his book of the sporting page by that time and not saying what he shawt.

Phoenix, Ariz., April 18 (CP) — John J. (Jack) Taylor, one time water boy for Jim Jefferies, the fighter, has been awarded by a jail magnet since 1908. New York, April 18 (CP) — The circus cannon missed fire and H. Cannibal got left behind in the cannon's maw.

His brother, Mario flew out on the scheduled trajectory with the greatest of ease.

He didn't. A few screamed.

Hugo was dragged out, weeping and half suffocated by the powder smoke released when the properly loaded cannon is fired.

Mario was unhurt.

Chicago, April 18 (CP)—Fellow of Evanston and Chicago had a new robbery wrinkle to worry about.

Harold Johnson, 18, Evanston salesman, told them a pretty brunette and her masked companion held him at a hotel room where they robbed him of $13 last night.

And then they forced him to telephone to a friend for a loan of $20 and the woman went out to collect the "loan," leaving her companion on guard. When she returned with the $20 bound Johnson and his captor were told to get out.

NOTICE OF BILL GIVEN

Ottawa, April 18—(CP)—Thomas L. Church, Toronto East Conservative, today gave notice in the House of Commons votes and proceedings of his bill to amend the criminal code, abolishing capital punishment for women and making wide changes in laws affecting negligent automobile drivers.

Number of Bills Waiting Discussion, When The House Resumes

Ottawa, April 18—(CP)—As members of parliament scattered over Canada today for a two-week Easter vacation the $32,000,000 the government proposed to spend on unemployment relief works remained tied up in the Federal Treasury. In an elongated sitting yesterday the Ministers fought to get the public works bill through the House, of Commons but failed to get it any more and more details of how the money would be spent and finally balked at an expenditure of $1,000,000 for the tunnel at Toronto.

Three Months of Work

Among the important measures passed through all stages in both houses in the three months were the trade agreement with France, drought relief in the Prairie Provinces, a weekly day of rest, Dominion Day holidays for officers of the judiciary and defence services, creation of an economic council, amendments to the farm loan and Canadian National Railways acts. All these were associated with the reform policy.

Other measures enacted included the act respecting partial restoration of civil service salaries, two months extension of the act creating the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission, interim supply bills and authorization to the governor-general to borrow money in times of Canadian National Railway deficits.

Twenty-two days session to date were brief debates on the speech from the throne, the forbearance of the opposition in the early stages and reversal of that attitude at the end, the volume of social legislation advanced by the government, and repeated demands of the Liberal opposition that the government complete its January budget at the earliest possible moment and call a general election.

DEFENCE COUNSEL IN OPEN COMBAT

Reilly Asks For Investigation of Funds Held by Fisher

NEW YORK, April 18.—(AP) — Edward J. Reilly, ousted chief counsel for Bronx Richard Hauptmann, and C. Lloyd Fisher, who succeeded him, came into open combat today following Reilly's demand for a Bar Association investigation of defence funds held by Fisher.

Toronto, April 18 (CP)—This was house cleaning day in Ontario's staid old legislature chamber as members, wearied from two months of deliberations, cleaned out their desks in preparation for the homegoing after Lieutenant-Governor Herbert A. Bruce prorogues the session this afternoon.

Members will return in the fall, however, because Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn has announced he will call a fall session to consider ways and means of balancing the Ontario budget.

Prorogation will mark the end of one of the most turbulent periods of discussion in the Province's history. Ninety seven bills were passed, most important being the measure to cancel Queen Power contracts.

THREE MOTIONS LEFT ON PAPER

Legislature Sits Till Three Today in Order to Prorogue

Toronto, April 18 (CP)—The first session of Ontario's 19th legislature was in its dying stages today.

The House adjourned at 3.40 o'clock this morning to sit again at one o'clock this afternoon. After conclusion of business the Lieutenant-Governor was scheduled to arrive at Queen's Park and prorogue the two-months-old session.

Estimates of the Department of Northern Development and Lands and Forests provoked the greatest discussion. Other issue would be all-night session were attacked by Col. W. H. Price (Conn., Toronto Parkdale) on Government dismissal of returned soldiers and sharp opposition criticism of the Government's intention to close Chorley Park, official residence of the Lieutenant- Governor after October 31. At the same time the Premier and Lieutenant-Governor offered to hold if a sufficiently large offer were received.

A brief debate was expected on at least one motion, a resolution by Opposition Leader George S. Henry for a committee to investigate charges made by the Government in connection with negotiation of the Quebec Power purchase contracts.

Two resolutions of Minister of Welfare David Croll are on the order paper. One proposes Old Age Pensions to blind persons above the age of 40 years and the other asks Old Age Pensions for persons who have reached the age of 65 years.

Lieut-Governor Expresses Fealty to His Majesty In Prorogation Address

Toronto, April 18.—(CP)— Mr., which will need consideration provincially, it has been decided to call a special Fall Session of this Legislature to deal with these problems, and also for the purpose of providing additional provincial revenue.

Change Fiscal Year

Due to the change in the date of closing of the fiscal year, you have now before you the estimates of the year immediately in prospect. This will undoubtedly be of great assistance in shaping the Province's financial commitments.

In order that the Government may take advantage of favorable market conditions, statutory provision has been made for the payment of refunding from time to time of loans made and securities issued by the Province and of bonds, debentures and securities guaranteed by the Province.

The Agricultural Development Act has been amended to reduce the rate of interest from 5½ per cent to $7,500 and increase the maximum period for retirement from 20 to 30 years. The Board is also given wider powers with regard to the making of individual discharges of Act. Employers and employees, will be encouraged by this Act to agree upon schedules of wages and hours of labor, which may, under proper circumstances be given legal validity and made applicable to all those in the industry within the particular locality affected.

It is gratifying to note that the resume of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway shows a profit to be fittingly applied to the sinking fund, and accordingly the management looks forward with optimism.

Fealty to Majesty

The people of Ontario rejoice in the fact that our gracious Sovereign His Majesty, King George the Fifth, will next month enjoy the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne of Great Britain, and in planning to celebrate the occasion in a spirit of loyalty and good will, in such fitting manner as will express to His Majesty the universal loyalty of the citizens of this province and their heartfelt wish for his continued health and happiness.

The Government of Ontario will join with that of the Dominion of Canada and those of the other provinces in fittingly commemorating this joyful event, and my advisers will be co-operating in every possible way with them to that end. In this regard, that all necessary arrangements may be made and perfected.

In connection with this event may I express my pleasure that the financial provision you have made in the estimates to assist the Jubilee Cancer Fund, sponsored by His Majesty.

Extension of the statutory provisions of the Mothers' Allowances Act to include allowances to mothers with one child will bring relief to many within this category. It is noted in this connection, that in the view of various social measures still before the Dominion Parliament,

SIZZLING NOTE SENT BY HITLE

Strongest Language Used Diplomat in Berlin

(By Melvin K. Whiteleather)

Berlin, April 18.—(AP)—British Embassy spokesman revealed today Ambassador Eric Phipps sent Great Britain a diplomatic note which is described as "a sizzler," although it declined to divulge the contents.

He said the note, clothed in the strongest possible language, was relayed to Sir Eric Phipps, British ambassador, from Prime Minister Konstantin von Neurath, Germ Foreign Minister Hitler.

The central argument expressed in the note, he said, to be part of day's action by the Führer and Chancellor Adolf Hitler's Cabinet, was Germany's unalterable conviction that the continued condemning German rearmament, the continued threatening and of any talk of Germany returning to the League.

It is known Hitler resents Great Britain's action in aiding France and Italy, German circles say, in the war just to believe Great Britain would stick to her role mediator. These sources said Hitler strongly felt Britain had departed from this role in ranging herself on the side of France and Italy, following the conversations between himself and the Rt. Hon. John Simon, Foreign Secretary, and Capt. Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal.

In Foreign Office quarters, however, efforts were made to effect Sir John reaching Berlin for Germans out and got them to their cars at the Anhalter Station.

English Rush from Cities To Celebrate Eastertide

(By Thomas T. Champion)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, April 18.— (CP Cable) —Leaden skies and blustery winds herald the opening of the Easter holidays in England although springlike weather is expected by the week-end.

The usual Easter rush from London and other cities promises to be greater than ever. It is estimated there will be 200,000 more motorcars and cycles on the roads than last Easter, when no fewer than 600 were killed or injured daily for a fortnight.

Thanks to the Government's stringent new regulations however, the toll of motor traffic so far this year has been 4,000 below the casualties in the same period last year.

Little Princess Elizabeth, who will be nine years of age in August Sunday, for the first time today saw one of the traditional ceremonies, the annual distribution of the Royal Maundy money in the Chapel Royal.

From a stall in Westminster Abbey beside her mother, the Duchess of York, the Princess saw the Archbishop of Canterbury, in his office as Lord High Almoner, distributing the coins.

The Archbishop and his assistant wore on their shoulders long towels of fine linen, typifying the tradition which links Maundy Thursday with the day on which Christ washed the feet of His Disciples. They were escorted in procession by the yeomen of the guard, in their scarlet and white uniforms and gleaming halberds.

The King and Armistice Day

THE Great War took much out of the King. So hard did he work during those hectic and tragic years, that when it was over, he was nearly a nervous collapse. But he had to keep going.

He had to put up a brave front to his people, struggling as they were to rehabilitate themselves. So it means that he must continue his hard work.

Always deeply religious, King George made it a special task to appear as often as possible, at every memorial service for those killed in the war. He stood humbly through rain and cold to pay homage to the dead. Indeed, it was on such an occasion, at the laying of a wreath on the great cenotaph in London that the King contracted the illness that nearly robbed the empire of its King in 1929.

Our pictures to-day shows His Majesty in the act of placing a wreath on the cenotaph in 1922. He visited every part of Great Britain, and even made visits to France and Belgium to pay his respects to those who gave their lives in defence of the empire.

CHOIR PRESENTS SACRED CANTATA

St. Paul's Choir, Stirling, is Assisted By Belleville Talent

Stirling—On Tuesday evening, April 16th, St. Paul's Choir presented "The Crucifixion" by Stainer. It was a splendid effort to a lengthy period of careful preparation under the capable direction of Mr. G. L. Chas, Musical Director and organist of St. Paul's church. An audience that thoroughly enjoyed the fine music and the message it brought, listened in rapt silence as the many solos, duets and choruses were carried through by a well balanced choir in a faultless manner.

The two guest artists secured for the occasion, Mr. J. Bankier, tenor, and Mr. H. Howard, bass, well-known soloists of Belleville shoulderd the responsibility for the solo work throughout the cantata and their contributions were a main factor to the success with which it was given. Many favorable comments were made regarding the ability of these two artists. This is the first cantata St. Paul's choir has offered in several years and the musical ability for which they are well known was very much in evidence under the guiding hand of Mr. G. L. Chas who for many years has directed the choir, and under whose capable instruction, this and other musical presentations in past years have been so successful.

As a finishing touch to this musical treat there was a short recital given by three local artists Miss Betty Conley, soprano soloist, Miss Ruth Coles, violinist and Mr. Charles E. Allen, organist of St. Andrew's Church who also presided at the console for the organ accompaniment. Mr. Allen opened the program with a special organ arrangement of Sarvenata, Miss Conley then offered a sacred solo in her usual fine manner, "I Ny Not O Israel by Dudley Buck. Miss Alice Calnor accomplished this part of the program with a violin solo (Cavatina) by Raff. Miss Coles is also an accomplished musician was accompanied at the organ by Mr. C. L. Chas.

Following these three outstanding numbers, the members of the choir took their places before the console and went through this effective lighted cantata with marked precision and accuracy to the end, when every section of the large audience joined in the final chorus and paid tribute to a fine display of their massive volume.

The various numbers were given in the following order:

Recit. (Tenor) "And they came to a place named Gethsemane" Solo (Bass) "The Agony", Chorus, "Jesus, Lead Thou Us On" (Tenor) "And they laid their hands on Him and took him away". Organ solo, "Processional to Calvary" (Tenor) "Ping with the gates". Chorus "Crucify Him" (Bass) "Behold, Recit. (Bass), "And when they were come", Chorus, "Cross of Love" Recit. (Bass) "He made Himself of no reputation." Solo, (Tenor), "King of Glorious" Recit. (Bass), "And as Moses lifted up the serpent", Chorus, "Look to Him and be healed." Chorus, "Holy Jesus". Recit, (Tenor), "Jesu said Father forgive them." Duet, "Oh, Love that hast thine divine pattern." Chorus, "Jesus the crucified." Chant, "And one of the Male factors". Chorus, "I adore Thee." Recit, (Tenor) "Jesus thereby beheld his mother". Recit. (Bass), "Is it nothing to you." Chorus, "The Lord is risen indeed." Recit, and chorus, "After this Jesus knowing that all things were accomplished." Chorus, "All for Jesus."

Mr. Charles Allen at the organ.

God Save The King.

At the conclusion of this fine entertainment the members of the choir were guests of the Women's Association in a banquet served by the ladies in the church parlors, when Mr. R. C. Martin, acted as master of ceremonies called on several of those present to speak, among these who gave short and appropriate addresses were: Mr. H. C. Bishop, Mr. C. Jones, Rev. Patterson, Charles Allen, Rev. E. M. Hankinson and Mr. C. L. Chas. Mr. Bankier and Mr. Howard also spoke briefly of the enjoyment they had received in connection with the work.

BICYCLISTS AND WALKS

Belleville has good enough roads for motorists and bicyclists too. Motorists do not use the sidewalks. Neither should bicyclists.

The police in their drive against infraction of the bylaw prohibiting riding on the sidewalks are to be supported by the public. Police action, by taken steps to put an end to the nuisance and what is more than a nuisance, as infraction may lead to a serious accident.

What justification boys and even adults can find for riding on sidewalks is hard to find, unless it be convenience in delivery of loads and in leaning bicycles against trees. There is a real task for the bicyclist in dodging pedestrians on the walk, which is more of a job than dodging motors on the roadways.

Concerted effort on the part of the police to put these riders where they belong and co-operation by the public will soon put a stop to the dangerous practice. One has only to recall that on a Saturday night recently bicycles were ridden on sidewalks in the dark without lights almost on the main street.

There is another matter about bicycles in this city. Some do not carry reflectors and lights. It seems reasonable that the same police might be expected to protect himself and others with these devices.

TRADERS DEVELOP SCHEME

Belleville Trade Group have made the suggestion to the Hon. R. B. Bennett, Premier, Hon. W. L. M. King, Leader of the Opposition and Hon. Honorable J. H. Thomas, Secretary of the United Kingdom for the Dominions of a two-way trade plan which would mean, the organization, and exchange of twenty-five million dollars a year in commodities between Canada and Great Britain. Capt. W. E. Schuster, chairman of the group, forwarded the proposal to the public men mentioned above with the co-operation of the vice-chairman, Mr. F. S. Deacon, and the members of the group.

The Schuster plan deals with the exchange of farm products of Canada and Welsh coal. This is one of the first steps to extend beyond the boundaries of the Bay of Quinte section in the two-way plan.

As outlined the scheme is as follows:

Canada would agree to import, within fifteen years, 2,000,000 tons of British anthracite, 250,000 tons of coke and 200,000 tons of bituminous coal yearly, which would enter Canada free of all duty and tax, at a price to assure the producer of a fair profit.

Great Britain would import, in the same period, farm products to the same value—estimated at $25,000,000—to be sold in the British markets at a price to assure a fair profit. These products would enter Britain free of all taxes.

The two-way scheme has been worked out on a small scale with a number of shipments from this point to Wales and shipments from Wales to the Bay of Quinte. Extension of the plan is seen as a direct result, should it be accomplished so far has proven, members of the group affirm, the success of the scheme. Therefore they would expand the idea to make it of importance in the development of imperial trade.

LENTEN SERMONS

Although the arguments of theologians do not absolutely prove the existence of God, they do make the fact of His existence seem to be the most probable of all probabilities, declared Very Rev. Milo Gates, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, preaching in the Cathedral.

"People wonder," the dean continued, "why their faith in Jesus Christ and His teachings does not absolutely explain all their difficulties of the moment. My friends, I answer 'I do not know'. I was never taught by my Saviour any definite, legal, categorical reason why it is that the man who is most needed in his community at the zenith of all his powers, just when he is able to do most things, he has ever done before, drops dead, and some drunken sot and butt end of humanity persists in existing to the torment and worry of the whole town.

"I do not know why awful diseases exist in the world. I do not know but I think this is far from a created world. We are not living in a created world. This world was not created in seven days or seven ages. I think that we ourselves have the privilege of doing our share to bring this world to perfection."

The teachings of Christ should be the model for civilization, Bishop W. F. Anderson, of Boston, United at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

"We are thinking today of the triumphant Christ. Triumphant means complete victory. Such relations. Such was the triumph of Jesus. It was both an inward and an outward victory. His inward victory had in it the dynamic of world conquest. It consisted in the complete surrender to the will of God. The unfinished task of civilization is this mastery of the life of the modern world, in the hearts of men, in the Christianizing of the social, industrial, political, national and international world order. No further progress can be made except as His spirit. His standards, His teachings, His life become the dictum for present and future procedure.

"The alternative is Jesus, and in all that He means, or lapse into another period like unto the dark ages. Nationalism and internationalism have failed..... Jesus is the only way of escape from the ditches. The next step is an adventure into the spirit of the all-conquering Christ, supreme among statesmen of all ages."

THERE ARE NO ATHEISTS

There is much talk these days about the decay of religion and the decline in worship. Indeed, these are among the things that are taken for granted by certain critics of religion who talk glibly about matters that seem to lie beyond their grasp. And yet, is there not a sense in which there are no atheists and no infidels in the world? Is it not a fact that we are all worshippers? In ancient days in Canaan every household had its deity, and every man his "high place" to which he went up to worship his god. In this matter Canaan was typical of the whole world. And today, the world over, every man, has his god to whom he pays homage in some fashion. His god is the person, or force, or thing, which he thinks supreme; his ideal, we might say, the controlling force in his life. There may be fewer people going to church today, but there are as many worshippers in the world as ever. They may not be worshippers of the Lord, but they are worshippers of something.

Ancient Rome welcomed all the gods of the nations and tribes of her far-flung empire, and on the Seven Hills she gave a place to Isis and Osiris, Thor and Ashtaroth, Jupiter and Venus, and a host of lesser deities. But modern civilization is as full of strange gods as Rome, and the gods of any Canadian city are as numerous and as varied as the gods of old Rome. They are worshipped in all their hideous, sinister or grossly pleasing manifestations. For there really is not an atheist or a godless person anywhere under the sun. In spite of himself even the materialist is compelled to dedicate his life to some unseen force, or ideal if he would preserve that life at all. Even a member of an anti-God society serves that society because of his mistaken dream that a world without God would be a better place for the poor and the oppressed.

Alexander Irvine pours ridicule on the idea that you can judge a man by the place where he hangs his hat on a Sunday. A man may be a heathen in St. Paul's Cathedral, even while he is a strictly orthodox church in the land and yet worship an idol more abominable than any to be found in the most foul of pagan temples. But if you cannot judge a man by the place in which he hangs his hat on Sunday, you can judge him by the god he worships. As some one has said, there is in the heart of everyone of us "an inner-most temple of silence where neither friend nor enemy may ever enter," and there the soul unveils its face and sets up its altar. That ideal and that altar proclaim both what we are and what we shall be. In other words, if you can tell what a man's prevailing motive is, if you can discover the creed he lives by—not the creed he utters with the lips or signs with a pen, but the belief by which he lives—if you can tell that, you have in your position to judge what the man is in heart and mind and life.

There are many and gods many, but in every life there is always one that is supreme. And there can be no such thing as a divided allegiance. The cry of the Jew and the Mohammedan was, "There is but one god," and this belief has been the corner-stone of whatever abiding morality there was, or is, or ever will be in the world.—New Outlook.

WHAT IS YOUR MILEAGE?

Mr. Charles Lavell, who has concluded fourteen years with the C.P.R. at the Trenton station, has figured out that during that time he has walked 18,000 miles in going to and from his work. And that raises the question of how many miles do you walk in a day?

We have a pedometer that fastens to the waist. It is set for a stride of 26 inches which happens to be our average stride when walking at an ordinary gait. We wore it one fall deer-hunting and in one week we knocked off 80-odd miles, or an average of over 11 miles a day for seven days, which is a reasonably good mileage for one whose work keeps him inside for twelve months of the year.—Trenton Courier-Advocate.

ISLAND OF ORLEANS OPENED FOR TOURISTS

The Island of Orleans, a few miles below the City of Quebec, has retained to a greater extent than any other park of Quebec Province, the old houses, customs and souvenirs of the French regime. This is because hitherto it has been practically inaccessible except by boat during the summer months. Its hidden charms first attracted and then retained Horatio Walker as a resident for many years. But a new steel bridge to connect the island with the mainland of Quebec will be open for traffic about the middle of July. It may continue to be a haven for tourists if the Government takes steps to preserve its ancient features. — Toronto Mail and Empire.

DUST STORM, A PICTURE

Now falls a twilight at noonday,
Strangely dim sunbeams fade;
Even men's faces are altered,
Ruddy hues swiftly fade.

Ashes from fires volcanic,
Grit from the hills and the plains,
Merged with a swirling fury
Bury the fields and lanes.

Torturing choking cattle,
Blocking the tiny streams,
Veiling the sun at zenith,
Hiding the white moon's gleams;

Bringing a blight to the city,
Stopping a myriad hands,
Flinging its curse on the country.
Ruining the verdant lands.

Dust like a pall is sifting
Into each tight-closed room,
Settling surely on all things,
Dust, that is symbol of doom.

—Aline Michaelis.

AIR CONDITIONING is the next big industry, according to economic experts, who look for great developments in this line, similar to the development of radio and automobile industries. Air conditioning in railway trains make them cool in the hottest climates, and houses can be treated the same way, including all public buildings.

MANCHESTER COTTON INDUSTRY which has been hard hit at various times during the past hundred years, is again facing a serious Japanese competition in cotton goods in the Far East, Manchester's best market, is cutting heavily into the trade. Japan puts cotton goods on the market at as much as fifty per cent. below Manchester prices, and that kind of competition is just not possible to meet. Manchester formerly had forty million cotton spindles working but many of these have been dismantled. Japan has nine million cotton spindles working, most of them from idle factories in Manchester. The Yellow Peril evidently is just as ominous in peace as in war.

PROSPERITY PIES are in the making. Every material and financial ingredient for producing a bigger Prosperity Pie than ever is now assuredly at hand. Seasoning alone is today lacking, and that seasoning is Faith, Confidence and Courage. Thus speaks B. C. Forbes, one of the most eminent economic authorities in the United States, and publisher of Forbes Magazine, a publication which stands high in the financial world. That the seasoning is at hand and ready for the Pie is Mr. Forbes' belief, only one little cloud no larger than a man's hand at present, dimming his view of the greatest prosperity wave ever—that cloud is the fear Congress may play purely political and spoil the Pie. However, Mr. Forbes is very optimistic, and in an article in Liberty Magazine of April 20 gives the reasons for his faith, and he makes out a very good case. He estimates buying and spending needs totalling nearly forty-five billion dollars, a sum sufficient, says he, if paid out in wages, "to give 45,000,000 workers employment for twelve months at $1,000 a year, or 22,500,000 work for two years." If the Pie is half right or even less the Prosperity Pie will be plenty big for the United States, and Canada of course will share, perhaps in greater degree, if the same amount of Faith, Confidence and Courage is exercised here. As a matter of fact prosperity never left us, we just lost Faith, Confidence and Courage.

GIRL ACROBAT FALLS from flying trapeze in Madison Square Garden, New York, breaks both wrists and suffers other injuries. Folks leaving Garden at end of show are heard to remark: "Great show, wasn't it, and that girl's fall,—just a part of the act,—makes those two or three days those features." And the girl acrobat remains in the hospital while the circus goes under canvas and ever on and on—fo the Show must go on.

Guests From Stirling Are Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Shaw

Stirling—Conducting an interesting study on the life of Joseph, Rev. R. W. Rowland of St. Paul's United Church continued the series on Sunday evening in a sermon that was of special interest to the younger generation, who were now passing through a most trying period. Under the instruction of this older folk they have turned all their effort to acquire education and now come forth from our institutions of learning lacking nothing but the opportunity to apply themselves to the work for which they have fitted their minds and bodies.

Special music was provided by the junior choir under the direction of Mr. G. L. Clute. The choir offered two fine anthems during the service, (Love Divine All Loves Excelling) and (All The Way My Saviour Leads Me.)

Choosing as his topic "Joseph the First Food Controller of the World" Mr. Rowland delivered a sermon that was especially encouraging for the young people present. He outlined the life of Joseph to the time when at last success came to him. The many ordeals through which he had passed, prison, isolation, torment both mental and physical. Then at last, the distinct honor of being summoned before the first prince of Egypt. In spite of all he had passed through in the days of adversity Joseph stood before the great Pharoh clean of body and mind, with a brave, a perfect specimen of young manhood. So deep was his appearance that the king was amazed to learn of him being brought forth from a dungeon. It was then that Joseph with the aid of God was permitted to render a service to the king which raised him in position from prisoner to prime minister in command to the ruler himself.

As Joseph unfolded the meaning of the king's dream, and warned him of the seven years of plenty to be followed by seven years, so great was his portrayal of wisdom and discretion that those in authority sought to retain his service and advice and placed him in complete control of the foods of the land. The storage of surplus crops under his supervision saved the nation from the seven years of famine. He took the first lady of the land for a wife and a chosen by the king, and in his exalted position she was a great help to him. His character remained the same in the days of prosperity as in the days of adversity. "We have passed through our seven years of plenty," said Mr. Rowland, "and possible fans of today could learn much from the honest home, and in youth, by adopting the same method of preparation for the lean years. Days of plenty will be with man comes a worthwhile lesson for the youth of today, that he be assure in a sorrowful plight. This is their lesson time and if they, like Joseph remain steadfast and unpolled their defeats with chin up, when their lean years come, and they most certainly will come, they will be as Joseph, strong physically and mentally capable of forging ahead to the success which is rightfully theirs.

Much interest is centred about these services which Dr. Rowland fearlessly champions the cause of Canadian youth.

The afternoon was spent in games and contests which were heartily enjoyed by all, after which a dainty lunch of sandwiches, cake, ice cream and candy was served by Mrs. Jean Munro.

Old Landmark Passes

On Church street the old brick structure that was originally built for a barn, and which has in recent years become the property of Mr. Ernie Munro is at last being demolished. The building, which was constructed many years ago of brick, for some reason became unsafe, and Mr. Munro thought it wise to remove it before it collapsed. The fact is not to be regretted by that they are being carefully taken out of circulation. None of the older residents seem able to recall when it was built.

Mr. Arthur Duncan attended the service at St. Andrew's church West Huntingdon on Sunday afternoon and assisted in the musical part of the service. Mr. Duncan's service conducted by Rev. J. A. Kofford.

Special Baptismal Service

A most interesting and unusual service was conducted on Sunday morning in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church by Rev. J. A. Kofford, when the entire service was devoted to baptism. Assisted by Mr. Fred Ward, one of the senior elders of the congregation. Mr. Kofford conducted the ceremony as the parents with their children lined across the front of the church. Those who were baptized at this occasion were: Bruce Kenneth Sine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Sine, Alletha Elizabeth Sheldon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fox, James Sheldon McIntosh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon McIntosh, Ralph Francis Fox, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Ray, Eileen Isabelle Gardiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Gibson, Alletha Elizabeth Sine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harould McGee, Muriel Eileen McGee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence McGee, Robert Cook Tollock, Mary Elizabeth Tullock, Ruth Evelyn Pauline Tullock, the three youngest children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Tullock.

After the ceremony, which was carried through in a very solemn fashion, a special trio was rendered by three members of the choir. "Take me to the city of old". Those taking part were: Margaret Hepburn, Christina Parpey, and Mae Johnston, singing with the fine service. Rev. J. A. Koffend preached a very inspiring message on baptism, "Baptism," he said, "was an act performed in obedience to God's command, and was done in particular consequence. When parents offer their children in baptism they comply with a wish or command of God equally important to that of the Lord's supper. Because some parents neglect or forget the duty of baptism at the time of their children's baptism is no reason why we should discard it. Some people differ in opinion regarding early baptism, when the child is too young to understand. God's interest is forever with the children. Down through the old testament the children were never excluded. God spoke to the tribes and family referred to them (three and thy seed). Christ did not forget the children. While here on earth. He gathered the children about Him. Some feel that baptism is essential to salvation, but nowhere in scripture is there any statement to verify that belief. The salvation of the thief on the cross who knew nothing of baptism speaks in loud opposition of such belief. When various divisions of the church quibble over the mode of baptism, the true significance of the ceremony which is a symbol of our obedience to God, is lost sight of.

This sermon was very enlightening from a scriptural standpoint, and the large congregation was greatly benefited by the service.

When the prospective rise to commodity prices, especially in lumber, is taken into consideration the up-to-date rise to the present economic conference and adjustments, the truth and the enlightened person will lose no time in dropping in at their office at 44 Station St., or telephoning 1053 for prompt and careful delivery. ## ERRANT DUCK IS STRUCK BY CAR

Telephone wires between this city's police station and Napanee hummed yesterday and the machinery of the local law went into action all because of a duck.

When an errant duck strays from the safety of its duck pen on the farm and becomes a victim to the wheels of progress on a busy road, the farmer shrugs and marks it mentally to profit and loss. When the same duck is being herded across the same road, and is struck by a car, the driver which allegedly and in a cold-blooded manner does not stop, then action is bound to occur.

Percy Rose's duck of Napanee was killed on the highway yesterday in just such a fashion. The driver did not stop. Mr. Rose reached for the nearest telephone, and to police of Belleville he gave a hazy description of the machine and the driver. Police posted themselves on the strategic points in the city on the alert for a duck-killing driver. But up to a late hour their lookout went unrewarded.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

He's Tired of Having Girls Court Him

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Why do most girls expect to be hugged and kissed the first time a man takes them out. Without being in the least slow or abnormal, I'm not at all partial to this strange wild women the first time I see them. Also, when I see a girl is too keen on making dates and signing me up generally, I lose interest in her.

Joseph

Some girls are without reticence or romance, and evidently you have met these to the exclusion of girls who are as fastidious and discriminating as you are. I get innumerable letters from girls who object strenuously to what they call being subjected to "grizzly bear tactics" on the part of young men they meet for the first time. And rather than be submitted to this a second time, these girls prefer to remain home.

You've just got to keep on trying until you meet the right type of girl; in spite of the ways of wild women, there are plenty of them left.

She's Sick of Cancelled Young Men

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm so tired of meeting conceited young men, that I feel as if I'd like to go to some South Sea Island, I've met dozens of them who have no manners and are dull and stupid, but they imagine any girl is flattered to death to receive the least attention from them.

I think that if girls stopped treating loutish young men as if they were gods, women would have an easier time after they are married.

Lois

With girls as with collectors, whatever is rare and difficult to obtain is most highly valued. In many places the girl population is out in much in excess of the boy population that naturally these comparatively rare specimens, are run after, and are spoiled accordingly.

Boys are conceited chiefly because girls spoil them. Girls accept broken dates without excuse or apology because they feel that if they protest, boys will not suggest another date. If girls had any spunk or independence, they would refuse to have anything to do with boys who treat them in an offhanded manner.

A HIGH SCHOOL ROMANCE

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Is there anything I can do to win my high-school teacher? I know that I can never forget him, because I love him so much. When he looks into my eyes I feel as if I were in heaven. I've never been in love with anyone before. I think he likes me, too, but of course his position as an instructor keeps him from showing it.

I hear he is going to a university to continue his studies at the close of this semester. Would it be possible for me to write to him, and how should I start my letter?

Pupil

It seems to me you are in a very strategic position, meeting the object of your affection every day. Just keep on; make a good record in your class, and don't let your interest in the young man instructor make you appear like a dumb Dora.

When he goes away and you decide to write to him, begin your letter "Dear Mr.....," and say some news about the school. And don't make your letter sentimental. Everybody is pleased to get an amusing, mildly gossipy letter, but to write in an affectionate or romantic way would be risky, as the young man hasn't yet told you he cares for you.

This will also answer two other young ladies who seem to be interested in their instructors.

Current Attractions at Local Leading Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"The Little Colonel"
Young and Old Thrill to Tiny Shirley Temple's Artistry

An absorbing story, and the presence of the old and lovely Shirley Temple, make "The Little Colonel", which opened a three day engagement yesterday at the Belle Theatre, an extraordinary screen event.

Once again, America's golden-haired sweetheart proves, through her unpretentious art, her honest acting, the hearts of old and young.

She is co-starred with Lionel Barrymore in this heart-stirring story of love at a bitter Kentucky family feud during the days following the Civil War, when personal judices still rankled, and a woman who dared give her heart to a Northern Yankee was ostracized by friends and relations.

The five-year-old screen sensation has the role of a tiny tot whose childish love and laughter cause the bitterness and false pride that make wretched a stern old Kentuckian's home, and then turned his back on his daughter.

Shirley's charm shines in this story which is as tender as her baby heart. Not only in her work extraordinary as an actress, but she quite captivates the most blase with her singing, quite surprising even with her dancing talents when she accompanies Bill Robinson and accompanies him in his famous stair-dance.

As if his wealth of surprises were not enough, this Fox Film picture produced by Mr. D. Zanuck via enda in a blaze of Technicolor. For the first time in her meteoric career, Shirley Temple is presented in color.

Barrymore's presentation of the obdurate colonel is masterly. Comfortable also is the work of Lionel Barrymore as the supporting cast composed of Evelyn Venable, John Lodge, Sidney Blackmer, Bonita Granville, Jordan Burress, Frank Darien, Hattie McDaniel and the already mentioned Bill Robinson.

"The Little Colonel" which will be repeated again Tonight, and Friday matinee and evening is heartily recommended to all picture lovers.

A very interesting and novel screen adventure, Benny Pollack and his jazzy famed Knights of Melody, and "Two Chaps and a Dame" are the attractions at the Capitol Theatre today for the first time locally, is a smashing drama with an unique twist on the eternal love triangle.

An unusual angle in the romance lies in the fact that two men, friends, each tries to give up the other by both love, in order that the other may be happy with her.

Kay Francis in the stellar role, and Warren William as the fascinations of her career as the beautiful society girl torn between her affection for one man and her mad infatuation for the other.

Miss Francis is always beautiful and stunning on the screen, but her role in this picture calls for exceptional talent in dramatic and emotional acting and portraying a role with such intense feeling and sincerity that she won the complete sympathy of the audience at the matinee.

The star has two leading men in the production, Warren William and George Brent, the former a veritable dictator of stability, and the other a likeable, though misguided assistant who has the sense of proportions through a terrific airplane crash in which every one but himself is killed.

He tries in every way to throw off his sanity by the maddest escapades imaginable, but is saved from the consequences of his scrapes by his staunch friend.

Brent does an unusually fine piece of work as the reckless, devil pilot, who seems to think of nothing but himself, and Warren William is excellent as the most stable lover.

Ross Russell and Henry O'Neill, both veterans of the stage, deserve special credit for their splendid characterizations. Others in the cast who do fine work include Russell Hicks, Allen Jenkins, Samuel Hinds, Martha Merrill and Edgar Kennedy.

"The Nut Farm"

"Poverty Row," that section of Hollywood which encompasses the lowest grade of the so-called "shoestring" motion picture producers, is one of Hollywood's least known spots at the same time most fascinating.

Here are located the producers of cheap westerns, the fly-by-night motion picture schools which prey on the ignorant investors in their get-rich-quick schemes and the unsavory makers of lurid sex pictures which are produced ostensibly to teach a high moral lesson, but which pander to the more vicious elements of the populated centres.

Unlike the big studios of the stars probably the worst of the lot, since the capital is sucker money procured from gullible movie-struck tourists who are usually persuaded to put their first savings into pictures, from which they never receive returns.

The methods of these unscrupulous promoters provide the colorful background for "The Nut Farm," which provides the second feature attraction on this same bill.

In the new film, hilarious entertainment is provided by the efforts of a retired New York grocer and his motion picture family to produce a motion picture sponsored by a movie school.

Wallace Ford, the star plays the role which he made famous in the stage version of the same name from which the picture was adapted. Ford is the grocer's character, is the grocer, while the wife, who portrays the leading role in the production, is played delightfully by Betty Alden. Others who take part in the hilarious proceedings are Joan Cole, Bradley Page, Florence Roberts, Spencer Charters, Lorin Raker and Arnold Grey.

Capitol News reel will be shown preceding the feature presentations. Last complete show 8:50.

A number of ladies from this line attended the Phillipston-Elzevir W. I. meeting at Mrs. W. Beatty's on Tuesday afternoon.

MOTORIST GETS MONEY'S WORTH

A local motorist believes in being fair, but also in getting his money's worth when he can.

While driving along a concession road north of the city this week, a plump chicken fell victim to his car. The accident, unavoidable, Stopping the machine some distance past the spot aboug which a cloud of feathers still floded on the still air, the local resident retraced his steps retrieved the chicken and with the bird in hand, strode to the nearest farm house. To the lady of the house who answered his summons he pointed to the limp fowl.

"I've killed it, but I'm willing to pay for it," he explained, "I'll buy the hen if you'll clean and pluck it and have it ready for me when I come back this way."

Two hours later the men returned. He stopped at the farm house, where he received the hen, cleaned, plucked and dressed. Seventy-five cents exchanged hands, and both smiled over the bargain.

King Ge orge is most accepble Monarch i n history

THE task that faced King George after his accession to the throne in 1910, was to break down a certain feeling of resentment against royalty that had developed throughout Great Britain.

Queen Victoria, a great Queen, had nevertheless not been very popular; King Edward, while he achieved greater popularity with his people, was frequently in embarrassment, occasioned by Joe Chamberlain, to establish a republic. King Edward, a master in foreign courts, was confused by issues at home and it is recorded that he several times contemplated abdication.

This was when King George, a new never failed at the slightest excuse to encourage them.

A historic phase of the King is presented today. It shows his majesty with Prince Henry (Duke of Gloucester) on their way to Epcom in 1922. Running alongside is a gipsy beggar. It serves to illustrate how easily approachable is the Empire's monarch.

A few years ago, this picture was erroneously used in connection with a story of the King to portray resentment on the part of his people to Britain's royal family. It caused a considerable stir at the time, but its true meaning carries with it a feeling diametrically opposite to resentment.

DERBY HAT PLACED ON SHAW'S BUST

New York, April 17 (CP) — A cable message to the Herald Tribune today said Jacob Epstein, famous sculptor, obtained permanent injunction against the Keystone View Company in Chancery division forbidding its circulating a photograph of his bust of Bernard Shaw with a derby hat upon it.

Newspapermen invited to an Epstein exhibition, counsel for the sculptor said, placed the hat on the bust of the Irish writer, an action the counsel characterized as being in "the worst possible taste."

MEN'S RETREAT IS CONCLUDED

Father John Knox, S. J. Stresses Use of Means of Grace

The sermon delivered by the Rev. John Knox, S.J., at the closing exercises of the men's retreat in St. Michael's Church last evening was on the words of Our Lord, "If you know these things, you shall be blessed if you do them." On another occasion our Blessed Lord has said that "Unto whomsoever much is given of the same much shall be required." Unto all God has given sufficient knowledge for doing the work of believing in Him but there is no doubt, that a full knowledge of Him is the priceless possession of every Catholic. Not only has He given the revelation of God through His works but the fuller revelation of Himself in the person of His Divine Son but also the gift of faith, which enables us to believe, without doubting, all that God has revealed. Therefore, a Catholic man is numbered among the favored as much has been given. He bears witness of this great gift in a positive manner by using it and also be it noted he bears witness negatively by his refusal to use it.

The gift of special grace of a retreat is the immediate response to the religious exercises of the retreat and this has been generously given by the women, the men, the boys and girls and the children of this parish. Our main concern is for the success of this retreat in the days which are yet to be, this will be secured in the devoted use of three powerful God-given means namely:—Fidelity to morning and night prayers. Secondly:—To live always in the state of grace. Thirdly:—At least a regular and if possible frequent use of the greatest of all possible means of grace — Our Lord, Body Soul and Divinity in the Blessed Sacrament. If you know these things and you do, the "if" in your case is deleted. You do know these things. In them and happiness in time and eternity is yours. Eye hath not seen and ear hath not heard nor has it entered in to the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath in store for those that know, love and serve Him. The baptismal vows are renewed by the vast congregation of men that filled the spacious church and the papal benediction was imparted by the missionary.

Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given by Monsignor Nicholson assisted by Rev. Father Baker as deacon and Rev. Father Collins as sub-deacon.

A large congregation was present this morning at the Mass at 8 o'clock, which was celebrated by the pastor assisted by Rev. Fathers Blaiane of the Cross and the Sermon on the Passion of Our Lord followed by veneration of the relic of the true cross. The ceremonies on Holy Saturday will begin at 7 o'clock. The Mass will begin at 8 o'clock at which Holy Communion will be given.

SEEKS TO RETAIN CUSTODY OF SON

Divorced Wife of Vermilyea Says She Will Fight to Last Ditch

Legal steps to retain the custody of her own 14-year-old son, Nathaniel, who has been held in custody by probation officers of Ontario, California, since he was taken away from his Sacramento home last December 5, are to be taken by Mrs. Mary Vermilyea, divorced wife of Harold W. Vermilyea, it was announced from California yesterday.

Mrs. Vermilyea said she would protest the reported attempt of Mrs J. Schorr of Ontario, California, and friend of Harold Vermilyea, to obtain guardianship of the boy. Mrs. Schorr, while on her visit to Belleville some weeks ago, during which time she visited Vermilyea twice a day in the condemned cell, admitted that some arrangement toward the children was one of the objectives of the visit.

"She has absolutely no right to the boy," Mrs. May Vermilyea is reported to have said. "She's mine and he was given to me by legal custody at the time of our divorce five years ago. I'll fight to the last ditch", she protested.

Mrs. Vermilyea who is said to be without funds, has been working on a sewing project under the California State Emergency relief administration.

Plea for Clemency

"Our conversation was of an entirely confidential nature. I have absolutely no comment to make on the matter," stated Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C. of this city today following his return to Belleville yesterday after an interview with the Hon. Mr. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice.

Mr. Payne, accompanied Col. R. H. Greer, K.C., Toronto, and chief defence counsel at the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea in this city last February, 5, 6, Ontario, for the counsel discussed the case for clemency on behalf of their client with the Hon. Mr. Guthrie. The interview lasted for nearly an hour.

What particularly was urged is that Harold Vermilyea, found guilty of the murder of his wife and mother in this city on October last and sentenced to death on May 2nd, was mentally irresponsible for the act. The medical evidence was slightly in conflict on this point, although the jury pronounced him sane at the time of the trial before proceeding with the indictment for murder, and in the verdict on the murder count found him both guilty and sane.

various provinces of Canada, where uniformity of methods has been demonstrated by the passing of important insurance legislation. Upwards of 40 amendments to the statutes respecting life and automobile insurance contracts have been adopted by the Province of Ontario, and concurrently, by almost all of the provinces of Canada.

Amendments have been made to the Liquor Control Act which give statutory authority for the collection of taxes on malt. There is a tightening of the regulations in respect to sales from vendors' premises and a simplification of the procedure to be voted on with respect to local option areas.

The provisions of the Mortgagors' and Purchasers' Relief Act have been extended for another year in view of existing economic conditions.

The high price of gold continues to result in substantial dividends to existing Ontario mines and makes profitable the mining of low-grade ore. The search for new fields has been stimulated and efforts of prospectors are rewarded with marked success. The recent increase in the price of silver has also resulted in the formerly active silver mines which were closed down to work while the price of metal remained low.

Game Fish Asset to Attract Tourist Trade Anglers Told At Meeting in City Hall

William Lang and Tom Jull of Toronto Assist at Gathering

PICTURES SHOWN

Announced Local Waters Would be Re-Stocked This Year

Advocating the conservation and preservation of game fish as a means to aid tourist traffic in this province, William Lang and Thos. Jull of Toronto brought this message to the Belleville Anglers' Association last night at an open meeting held in the City Hall, where more than 50 were in attendance. At the conclusion of the meeting, where action pictures of game fish were accompanied by lectures were shown, the entire meeting retired to the Local Armouries, where Messrs Jull and Lang gave demonstrations in the art of fly casting.

The meeting was opened by President Shortt of the local Anglers' Club, who formally introduced Mayor Tice as the chairman of the evening. His Worship caused surprise at the large following afforded game fishing following, which he called on Mr. Lang, who spoke at length in relationship to the advantages of game fishing in a community in the matter of attracting tourist trade.

Natural Location

"You in this county have an excellent and natural location and your waters are second to none in Ontario," stated Mr. Lang in his opening. To clearly and forcibly bring out his point Mr. Lang quoted figures from Dominion statistics which showed that in 1930 three hundred million dollars came into Ontario through the medium of tourist trade. "In 1933 this figure had dwindled to one hundred million, but last year an increase was seen and one hundred and forty millions of dollars were spent by tourists in Ontario," quoted Mr. Lang. "Next to bass metals I personally believe that our game fish have more tourist trade value than any other medium of inducement offered tourists and I also expect two hundred and fifty million dollars to be spent in this province in 1935 by tourists.

Hon. R. J. Manion of the Federal Government, predicts "that five hundred million dollars in tourist trade can be looked for by residents of Ontario within the next few years, so you gentlemen can see the advantages of the preservation of game fish in your own locality," stated the speaker as he pointed out that there were more lakes in the Dominion of Canada than in all of the rest of the world combined. In order to more definitely bring out his viewpoint, Mr. Lang spoke at length of the action being taken by the government of Newfoundland in the relationship to the attracting of tourists through the medium of their fishing facilities. "Millions of dollars each year are being expended by tourists in Newfoundland, where fishermen from all four corners of the globe come together to fish for Newfoundland's famous Atlantic salmon," he said just previous to the projecting of action pictures taken of himself and Mr. Jull while salmon fishing in Newfoundland.

Moving Pictures Shown

Following two interesting game fish moving pictures Mr. Thos. Jull spoke to the meeting on "The Romance of Atlantic Salmon", explaining the various phases of the life of deep sea salmon. This picture proved most interesting as Mr. Jull explained the spawning system of the salmon and the complete evolution. Moving pictures taken by Mr. Jull and Mr. Lang at the expense of three dollars per foot were shown, where these men were seen fishing for Atlantic salmon, a thrilling sport. Other moving pictures demonstrating the art of fly casting were also shown the meeting as was a picture showing the proper methods used to catch the elusive brook trout.

President Shortt spoke at length, while Dr. Van Blaklee, chairman of the re-stocking committee of the Belleville Anglers' Club, reported that the Ontario Government had agreed to re-stock many local streams and lakes this spring. "We have made applications for speckled trout to be placed in local waters, these as well as brown trout and pickerel have been promised, while Crowe Lake, Crowe River and the north Moira River are to be restocked with bass, the game and fishery department informs us," stated Dr. Blaskiee as he inferred that further surveyance of local waters had been promised by the department in 1935. The meeting adjourned to the Armouries at this point, where Mr. Lang and Mr. Jull gave demonstrations of the art of fly casting.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, April 18 (CP).—A mild display of buoyancy in the silver shares on the strength of a slightly lifted price of metal was the feature of the mining market's effort to lift early session.

THE LOVE FLIGHT

by Jeane Dixon

CHAPTER FIVE

At eleven o'clock next morning there was a knock at the door of Anne's room. She answered, prepared to find Berta and to give her an understand any communication between them was to be on strictly official basis.

This one was not Berta. She was a middle-aged woman, tall and wooden, and she spoke to Anne in a monotone.

"Madame says you're to come to her border."

"Border? I'm afraid I don't understand."

"The round room with the ceiling like a church."

"Oh yes, of course." Border—boudoir, Anne thought. I could have guessed. Too many things are happening—too many strange things. I'm getting muddled. This dress I'm wearing needs pressing in the worst way. And my shoes are a sight. A good polish would hide the worn places.

Anne entered the circular room to find Mrs. Adolph Hoag—in a bathrobe of a violent purple, rumpled and of indeterminate vintage—drinking strong black coffee.

"Who are you?" Madame demanded, pouring another cup and peering into the pot for more.

Anne's glance traveled the room hurriedly. Had some one entered behind her? No. There was only herself.

"Speak up! Speak up!" Madame clattered her cup. "You must have a name."

"I'm—I'm—Fifi."

"I'm to assist your maid—"

"Oh yes. So you are. You're the arty one from that robber agency. A gall they get, charging such prices. The last one they sent I wouldn't have over my washtub. Maybe you're better, maybe you're worse. Bah! Bah! Where are you?"

"Here, Madame." Bats came through a door on the run.

"Then why don't you stay here? What was it I want Fifi to do this morning?"

"She is to choose some gowns and accessories for you, Madame, in the colors she thinks will be best. 'And she is to suggest to you a gown for luncheon."

Madame chuckled, drained the last drop of coffee.

"Bats," she boomed, "you're a mind-reader. We get company from the old country for lunch. He's a lout or a duke or something. You don't have to worry about them foreigners. Just give 'em plenty to eat and as much good wine as they can hold. That's all they come for, anyhow. Pick me out a dress Fifi, one that would look all right in a castle."

From the racks, Anne selected a beige crepe, soft and flowing.

"Well, Fifi the horsereigolly!" Madame stood back and surveyed a prodigy. "Bats, she's picked another one of them French names to label in it, either, I cut 'em out to keep the custom officers from getting

"Anne—it's too long. You're Fifi. A name with some class to it—pfft. All right, Fifi. Take off your hat and let's see what you can do."

maid Berta stood in the arch. One detached item was raised as she took the curve Berta spat after it. The gesture was so ugly that Anne huddled in her seat, suddenly felt weak and a little bit ill.

"What's the program?" Carl Case said.

"Shopping. Madame said you would know the best shops—those that do not rob her."

"Madame is an optimist. They all rob her. But I know the ones that get away with it the least."

Shopping for Mrs. Adolph Hoag was a revelation. In the "Maison" de Celeste, for example, Anne's first stop. A gown and the simplest of accessories brought forth velvet, very abbreviated, very chic —three hundred dollars.

"I'd like a memorandum of the bill, please." Anne told the saleswoman. When the memorandum came an item of $15 "for alteration" had been added to it.

"You've made a mistake," Anne said, indicating the $15 item. "There are no alterations."

The saleswoman became confidential.

"You are Madame Hoag's personal maid?"

"Why—yes."

"Then I am to understand you're new in the service. It's customary for Madame Celeste to allow her a recent commission on purchases to professional shoppers. Personal maids are listed as professionals."

Anne returned the memorandum to the saleswoman.

"Please deduct the fifteen dollars," she said. "I do not wish a commission. Madame pays me for my services."

The saleslady took the memorandum. Her suavity was gone. Her eyes were hostile. Bolp of a maid Celeste would have to be careful now about overcharges on the Hoag bills.

"Where now?" Carl Case wanted to know when the shopping tour came to an end.

"If you could drive me to the boarding house in St—— street where I've been stopping," Anne said, "I might be able to get my bags and arrange for my trunk to be sent to Bois Joli. Madame has given me the afternoon off."

"Madame has what?"

"She has given me the afternoon off."

"Hol-ee smoke! How did you do it? Mesmerize her and get her consent while she was in a comatose state?"

Laughter danced in Anne's dark eyes. The suggestion that Madame could ever be in a comatose state was ludicrous.

"No." she said. "Madame has a kind heart. She saw how sweep I looked, and is giving me a chance to refurbish myself."

"Wrong answer entirely. You look as fresh as a rain-washed daisy—make it an orchid, if you prefer. Only, with your eyes—they're almost black, aren't they?—I rather incline to the dairy. Also, I've an idea. Great surprise to me, Thought I'd done with ideas forever, but the last two days they've broken out on me with increasing frequency. Care to hear it?"

"I'm breathless." She was literally. Carl Case had turned the car into a wide boulevard. Not toward it—street, surely. In the opposite direction.

"It's my afternoon off too, in a way," he said. "Madame will not use the car today, and she has instructed me to take advantage of the lapse to attend to any necessary overhauling. There's nothing to be hauled except your luggage, and we can pick that up later. If there is something you care to do, some place you want to go, car and chauffeur are at your service."

"Any suggestions?" Anne said, accepting the challenge to indulge with the recklessness of youth, too long denied. Play, She'd forgotten how to play.

"A swim might do. We're a very fine ocean, if I can think proper."

"There are public beaches.' We could go to one of them, It's a noble suggestion, really, Mr.——"

"I'll trade you a Carl for an Anne."

"Bargain. If we could stop by my boarding house, I've a bathing suit there, and I could arrange about my trunk."

Carl turned the car so quickly Anne was co'pelled to regain her balance against his shoulder. There was that in his eyes, as he looked toward her and glanced down into her startled face, which set her heart racing faster than the engine that was whirling them—whither?

"We'll pack the trunk in the back of the car, where it won't show. There's plenty of room, and for your bags, up to a dozen."

Now the blue car was humming along the boulevard again. Anne's luggage stowed safely in the rear. A swim! The surf rolling in, flowing over her, carrying away the tenseness and the weariness of the past weeks where the problem of existence become a grim battle for the barest necessities. Carl knew how to swim. With those shoulders he could swim rings around her.

There's a place called Seabeach," Carl said. "Never tried it myself, but other chauffeurs recommend it highly. We might look it over."

"Let's." Seabeach. Anne tried to recall where she had heard the name. Why, yes, of course. Now she remembered. Two seasons ago she had spent a part of the winter in Palm Beach. Bruno Hoag sent her maid from New York and the girl had purloined Anne's best bathing suit and gone for a swim at Seabeach. Anne had missed the suit the very afternoon it was taken and the maid had confessed.

Seabeach, a public beach. Anne had never been to a public beach. Always beaches she knew belonged to the owners of estates; to fashionable clubs; to smart hotels. Cabanas and champagne cocktails and dancing. This would be different. Just she and Carl and some people whom it did not matter. She was going to like Seabeach.

Anne rested on the beach, running the powdery white sand through her fingers and relaxing in the sunshine. A romp with the surf had drained her body. She was beautifully tired. Carl Case had been either an Olympic champion or a lifeguard. She must get him to teach her that trick of shooting forward, suddenly in the water like an arrow from a bow.

Anne sat up, looked about her. Few people on the beach at this time of the day. Out of season. Unbrushed the sand from her shoulders. She was at the point of reminding Carl that every fashionable Seabeach did not last forever when her roving eyes came to full stop. A man was trotting up the beach, bound in her direction. She looked again—Surely not—Bruno Hoag? Bruno Beasley?

Bruno in Palm Beach at this time of year? And if he were in Palm Beach, why would he be at Seabeach? She was not mistaken. Bruno in person!

"Oh!" Anne was galvanized into a need for action. "I left my purse in the bathhouse, Carl. Would you mind getting it for me?"

"You in the house, if some one has were in Vichy.'"

"I was sort of fed up," Anne said. "Thought I'd get back earlier."

"Exile! I must say you've found a place for it. I am down to do some repairs and additions to our local igloo. Had to come to this jolly oasis to keep from talking to myself.

"Pull as a desert." Anne, yawned conspicuously. "But restful."

"See her, pretty soon. Won't set on in a big brother way, "what's come over you? Rolling from Glen Arden, leaving Craig prostrate, and turning up in the slums of a winter resort in the middle of the summer? It doesn't make sense."

"Don't annoy me, Bruno," Anne said peevishly, "I told you I was fed up."

She must be cautious, cunning. Bruno had the tongue of a medicine making woman, the curiosity of a

Carl found it first." Carl was on his toes, sprinting toward the bathhouses.

Anne thought: "I'll sprawl on the sand and turn my head until Bruno passes.

Too late. He had seen her and came galloping on, sand flying from his heels.

CHAPTER SIX

Anne Austin continued to run sand through her fingers and to feign ignorance of the approach of Bruno Beasley. Now he was beside her. A handful of wet sand landed in her lap. She simulated a start, looked up into Bruno's grinning moon face.

"Anne!" Bruno panted. "So this is where you're hiding! And we've made bets you stole a nanch and cat. Awaken his suspicions, and the whole world, her world at least, would know where she was and what she was doing. If only Carl would delay until she could get rid of Bruno!

"I'm having a rest cure," Anne said idly. "Stopping with friends at Bois Joli." Funny how the truth could be moulded to an end. She hoped Bruno had not heard of Bois Joli, much less had occasion to come in contact with its owners.

Vain hope.

"Now listen, sweetmeats." Bruno wagged a reproving finger. "You're also adding me to believe you're willing away precious hours with the Hoags or wherever they are, in the blue airocity—the moving picture set that had put the blight on Shore Drive!"

Anne's chin came up. "If you're speaking of the Hoags," she said icily, "you're being distinctly rude. Ran along Bruno, there's a dear. The doctors have advised quiet and I have a slaying headache. I'll be in touch with you later."

"Sorry. On the level I am, Anne. But you must admit that blue bastille of the Hoags is what you see in the night after an awful binge. I'm hitting north tomorrow. Anything I can do?"

Anne, smiled wanly. North tomorrow. Thank fortune for that.

"Nothing," she said, "except for my love to Mrs. Bruno Hope you come down and get it. I stay on."

"Were planning on an early getaway from the main stem," Bruno said her. "To avoid wheel cheers."

Anne's eyes sought the bathhouse, followed along the beach. Carl Case —where was he? There, some distance in the shade of a tree. That is, she decided, he was. Apparently in contentment of his toes.

Anne watched Bruno Beasley disappear into the bathhouse. She judged her fate had gone over with him. Bruno must know she was at Bois Joli. Bruno must know after the manner of his kind, he would confide she was making the most of stock in hand. Social rackpenny cocktails and dancing not only willing, but eager to pay high for the right guests, for the desirable introductions they could offer. She thought of that! But then she would be riding away with Carl. She would not be at Seabeach. She would have an afternoon off to play at being in city limits. Carl was not the wind.

She halloaed to Carl. He trotted toward her, swinging her bag in his hand.

"You're lucky," he said. "Public beaches are favorite spots for treasure hunters."

"Thanks!" Anne snapped the bag from him, gave her vanity case. "There's nothing to lose, except my reputation."

He watched her pat powder on her nose, run rouge over her lips.

"I'm joining you," he said. "That would be no loss at all."

She stopped the make-up into her bag. She disliked flattery, when it was deliberate. This was not flattery. It was more. She sensed, say something about Bruno. Carl was not to be talking. Or was he?

"A friend of mine happened to be visiting there," he said, his tongue trip. "Quite a—a—surprise." Carl flung himself full length on the sand. He sat bolt. The world was kind of cramped at times."

Cramped. Bad for them. Knew she had not wanted to meet Bruno, at least like this, and had not wanted Bruno to meet him. She flushed guiltily.

Carl kept his silence for a while.

"Time to be getting back to the mill," he said, standing up and shaking off the sand like a damp puppy.

"Yes, I suppose we must. It's been such fun here——I, that is——"

"Relax," he said.

Relax. A few minutes longer. Long enough to make reasonably sure Bruno had gone. Suppose he should follow them from the bathhouse. It would be like him. He was an inseparable friend of Craig Braden. He would be anxious to report to Craig ownefa'"I .H'kq'eOteyiiehqJ'il. in that unbelievable blue uniform a chauffeur—what juicy morsel that would be for Mayfair breakfast tables!

"I'll take a farewell dip to get the sand out of my ears," Carl said. In a moment he was beyond the surf swimming toward the breakwater.

Then he had sensed her panic! Was aware, too, no doubt, of its reason. What a silly little snob she was! A snob and a coward.

Why hadn't she told Bruno the truth? Sooner or later he must know. All would know—there gay companions of her first youth who looked upon life as a grand fete staged for their entertainment. Now he was making a half circle, was shoreward. She breathed easier. She'd as him to be more cautious. The surf along this shore was treacherous.

In the blue car again — bowing along the boulevard toward Bois Joli. Carl was speaking now, a running conversation that amused her.

"I promised to give you some things of the history of Bois Joli for Bow Jolly, as Madame calls it. Some of the names are interesting. Mrs. Adolph Hoag you've met. She is also a Mrs. Adolph Hoag. He's a rotund little fellow with ears like sails, a billiard-ball head, and a disposition that both edges of a safety razor blade. When Madame's in charge, Bois Joli is a madhouse. When she will allow him, he keeps to his part of the house, adjoining her apartment. He also made his money in sausages. Adolph Hoag, the Sausage King. That is also a nickname before Madame. Two or three behind-the-scenes characters who make that mistake are still running.

"I love sausages," Anne laughed. "Small, fat ones, all brown and crusty."

Carl, twisting the car wheel, went on solemnly, "but leave 'em. Oh, yes. There's a nephew, Adolph, Jr., called Dolph. Hulking brute. I don't care much for Dolph. He shows up at rare intervals, but ever since he is too often."

"He sounds like something cruel parents use to frighten ill-behaved children," Anne remarked.

"You've caught the picture exactly," Carl applauded. "Now as to the Bois Itself. and the Bois Joli Country Club which is one of the choosnalysis would pronounce a certain gesture which picked up the germ in Europe last winter. When the Bois was first completed three years ago it was dedicated to the Villa Hoag. A name which the local humorists promptly changed to Hogville. The buildings then were the natural color of wood and attractive enough with their red tile roofs."

"They would-be. If she'd only left them. Whatever caused her to change?"

"She went to Europe. In Paris a French officer took her to dine in the Bois. She's never been the same woman since. Somehow she got hold of a piece of cloth, the kind the French use for their uniforms, and she's spent her life since then staghing things match that piece of cloth. She had the whole place done over to match it and reobristened it Bois Joli, which was the name of the restaurant where she dined with the officer. Servants, cars, stationary—all blue. The couches of scarlet and gold you will recognize also as being taken from the French military." There's a blue dinnery set, and specially blown blue glasses from Venice. So far the white poodle, Blitzen, has escaped. I don't know how. Blitzen is a perfect subject for blue dye. You haven't met Blitzen.

"Oh, Carl!" Anne laughed until tears came. "It's too ridiculous. I thought Bois Joli was a fright. Now it's just funny."

Anne was unpacking her bags in her room. A knock at her door, followed quickly by Bats.

"Madame wants you at once, Fifi". Bats was in a flutter. "Did you get the gowns she sent you for?"

"Yes, of course."

"They haven't come and Madame is in a state."

Anne followed Bats on the double quick in the circular boudoir.

"You, Fifi!" Madame shouted the moment Anne entered the door. "Where've you been? Where's them dresses I sent you for? You ain't got 'em! Don't lie! You been gallavantin', Gallvantin', and me with out a stitch to my back."

A whole roomful of clothes and not a "stitch" to her back, Madame stood in the middle of the room, the soiled bathrobe falling from her shoulders, her arms waving, her hair

WOLVERINES WIN ALLAN CUP FROM PORT BEARCATS

First Time Nova Scotia Has Ever Won Senior Title

SCORE IS 4-3

Port Arthur Lacked The Experience Due to Youth

(By George C. Murray)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Halifax, April 18.—(CP)— Nova Scotia boasted her first Canadian Amateur Hockey Championship in the history of Allan Cup Competition and victorious Halifax Wolverines put thoughts of last night's 4-3 conquest of Port Arthur Bearcats behind them to dream of representing the Dominion in the 1936 Olympic games.

The Wolves had hardly recovered from that bruising battle when they entered the finals against the Bearcats, and it was only by the skin of their teeth, that they managed a 3-2 win in the opening encounter.

Mickey McGlashan whipped in the first counter last night on a pass from Franklin Gillman. Then the tenacious McGlashan sped through the Bearcats and slipped the disc to Ron Hudson, who drove past the 19-year-old Port Arthur goalie.

Alex Sinclair and Bill Thompson combined for the first Bearcat goal, a hand ball way through the middle session, Thompson poking the rubber home, but Hudson, was at his old tricks two minutes later, when Lennon's pass to beat Jackie Nash into a victory.

After three minutes of the final session, Gillman's long shot by Lennon's pass to make the score 3-2, and there were worried looks on the Halifax faces as the thunders chased them into the corner.

But flashy Owen Lennon eased the strain when he trapped the Bearcats all down and went the length of the ice to beat Nash. Goal judge Norm Pryday lifted another pass Bubar but the rally was in vain.

(Coach, Italian Olympic Hockey Team)

Halifax, April 18.—(CP) The Wolverines will have to show some-thing better than they did last night if they expect to keep their Olympic Hockey Championship in Canada.

I saw the Halifax squad beat Port Arthur Bearcats and bring the Allan Cup to Halifax. They are clever and were the undoubted masters of the situation. Nevertheless, at the same time they didn't play like the best hockey I've seen in my time and that's the idea behind an Olympic team.

Last night they found the going awkward against Port Arthur's style, which, I like and admire. Pete Appleton and Jimmy Ripple contributed immensely to the Montreal cause, Ripple knocking in five runs.

Cold weather in New York State forced the postponement of the Buffalo-Albany and Toronto-Syracuse games. They may get into action today if the temerature rises.

WEIRD PLAYING MARKS OPENING IN INT. LEAGUE

Newark Bears Off to Flying Start by Defeating Rochester

GOVERNOR LOOKS ON

Loose Play Features Win of Baltimore Over Montreal

(By The Associated Press)

Newark Bears who have finished on top of the International League standing for the past season are only to get belted out of the playoffs before they ever reached the Little World Series, have made another flying start toward the pennant with the start of the 1935 campaign.

Braving wintry weather, that wiped two of the opening games off the program a little further north, the Bears entertained 8,000 fans, including Governor Harold Hoffman of New Jersey by slamming out a 10-3 decision over Rochester Red Wings.

Baltimore Orioles and Montreal Royals gave an even wilder demonstration of loose early season play before Baltimore finally won out in the ninth 13-12.

A crowd of 8,000 saw the weird struggle, which saw four Oriole hurlers and three Montreal fall to hold the batters in check and each team committed four errors. Rob Gibson, newly acquired shortstop, produced the odd run in the ninth by smashing a hit against the fence after two were out. Woodley Abernathy clouted four of Baltimore's 19 hits while Pete Appleton and Jimmy Ripple contributed homers to the Montreal cause, Ripple knocking in five runs.

Cold weather in New York State forced the postponement of the Buffalo-Albany and Toronto-Syracuse games. They may get into action today if the temerature rises.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

In true "we was robbed Joe Jacobs style", Manager Glen Allen of Toronto Maple Leafs returned from the provincial finals on Gloves with fire in his eye yesterday. "I don't mind getting beat, nor do my boys, but the trimming that Wheeler got in Toronto Thursday night was the limit. If they needed was a horse and a gun and they'd have seen some Jane took like an ordering punk," continued Manager Allen as he was still hot under the collar last night. Doubtlessly Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler was on the receiving end of a home town verdict, as numerous press dispatches related yesterday.

"You can tell the world I'm more than satisfied with the showing of our boys in Toronto. Not only did Wheeler get the run by" but Bill Crawford also should have been awarded the nod in his bout with Summers of Toronto. For I'm willing to engage Genovese for a return bout with Wheeler here in Belleville early next month and the local fans can see for themselves just who is the better boy then." promised Skipper Allen. Undoubtedly Wheeler must have had the support of the larger number of the fans on Tuesday night, when he stepped into the ring and in the semi-finals beat the ex-Dominion feather-weight champion, Mel Gilonna. The fact, that Wheeler slathered Gilonna proved he was no respector of personages.

Last Night's semi-finals of the Toronto Daily Star and a fight exponent, par excellence, had plenty to say in reference to "The Fighting Bulldog from along the banks of the Moire", as he dubs him Mr. Marsh comes out and says that Wheeler not only won the admiration of the fans, but nearly caused a riot when Genovese was awarded the decision over the local mittster. In all Mr. tells the story as follows:

"Pity Toy Bulldog from the banks of the Moira in Harvey Wheeler, a square set rugged little gem; about 5,000,212 feet high, about the height of a couple of the Dionne quintuplets and end — about as wide, and powerful looking as the original Pocket Hercules. He was an entry in the featherweight class at the Central Ontario boxing championships and the Canadian championship trials up at the Garden last night.

Young Wheeler was full of fists, fight and fury.....a rarting, tearing little fireball of outstanding courage and determination.....one of those gritty little fellows who just makes in such heavens reverent leather. He throws his padded maulers around and pays his opponent will have his mush where they land.

Well, anyway, this young wirlwind from the shores of the Bay of Quinte was first drawn against that busy clever veteran of just another wars, Mell Gilonna. Gilonna towered above the little chunk of potential dynamite. It looked to be a crime to set the little fellow in against a smart lambaster like Gilonna.

Gilonna in a mellow mood, toyed with the youngster the first round —just ducked and blocked his wild punches, tied him up when he rushed in—and laughed at him.

Gilonna was dallying with his young opponent in the second round. He was confident that when he loosened up and let go he could smack the kid clean back to Belleville—if he happened to be backed that way.

But when Gilonna did try to loosen up and smack the Belleville Baby down in the last round he couldn't do anything much with him. The air was too full of flying fists—the harder he smacked the harder the youngster whacked back and the more he crowded him. Reputation meant nothing to Wheeler. He acted as if he had never even heard of Gilonna, conqueror of a score of hot things from over the border.

And the crowd howled its delight when the three judges gave the verdict to Wheeler for his aggressiveness.

It was a pleasing joke.

The vocal riot came later!

That Gilonna victory sent Wheeler into the final of a series against young Joe Genovese of the Elmgrove A.C. a smart youngster who had just whipped Jack Fraser of St. James in a rousing bout.

In the final the crowd got in behind wheeler and rooted vigorously for him as they saw the boxing veteran in the resin.

But Wheeler couldn't find the Genovese jaw uncovered or his ribs unprotected — at least, not often enough to do any real damage— but he did carry the fight to the Toronto boy all the way. In the final round Genovese cuffed the battling Belleville around quite a bit, but he couldn't keep the from tearing in and swinging and carrying the fight.

The commotion started when the verdict came in. It was a split verdict, with a majority on the Genovese tickets in the bet.

The instant the verdict was announced the crowd set up an almost unanimous roar of "robbery". Kept it up for ten minutes without a let-up—wouldn't let Announcer Bill Smith announce the rest of the bouts of the evening.

The stuff they buried at the officials would have curled the mane of a rhinoc

Maybe it is just as well that the two-bit customers were too far away to get at the judges—and the seats were permanent fixtures.

The verdict—well, Genovese got it, certainly the better boner, landed the most glean-cut punches, and blocked most of the Wheeler round-hoopers, but Wheeler certainly did nine-tenths of the leading and forcing and made it a fight."

Boston, April 18.—(AP)—A total of 207, including six former winners and 15 Canadians, were assigned numbers last night, when the Boston Athletic Association closed its entry list for its historic April 19, Marathon from Hopkington to its Back Bay clubhouse.

Dave Komonen, sturdy Sudbury, Ont., mine carpenter, who led the field home last year, grew the prized No 1 and the five other former winners, the veteran Clarence H. De-Mar, who will strive for his eighth victory in this long distance classic Friday, Bill Kennedy, Leslie Pawson, holder of the 2.31.01 3-5 record Jimmy Henigan and Paul Debruyn found numbers in the first ten reserved for them, as did young Johnny Kelley, of Arlington, Bill McMahon of Worcester, and Alex Burnside of Toronto.

Kelley, who will start as one of the favorites, gave Komonen a great battle until he weakened during the final stage of last year's race. Paul Dengis, Baltimore's great distance runner and Russell George, the Medrow, N.Y., Indian and winner of the recent Syracuse marathon, also are expected to make determined bids.

The 18 Canadians entered include six-man team of the Monarch A.C. of Toronto.

New York Yanks Turned Back 2nd Straight Time by Boston, Who Appear Headed for Top

Win by 4-3 in Tenth on Single by Bing Miller

ROOSEVELT OUT

Sees Washington Win Opener From Philadelphia Athletics

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer)

Boston, the centre of baseball interest during the winter, apparently has no intention of relinquishing that place now that the 1935 season has actually begun.

When the curtain rose Tuesday it was Babe Ruth and the Braves, who held the centre of the stage. Yesterday it was the Red Sox, who indicated in no uncertain terms, that they are out to get into the pennant fight and stay there as they turned back the mighty New York Yankees for the second time in succession. Tangling in a seven round duel, the Red Hose won out 4-3 in he 10th inning after they had escaped a defeat by the slim margin of a ninth-inning homer by Max Bishop. With Charley Ruffing hurling great ball, the Yanks took the lead when they solved Gordon Rhodes' delivery in the seventh. Bishop scored his homer behind a pinch single by Roy Johnson in the ninth to tie the count, then another pinch hitter, old Bing Miller, took over the job and drove in the winning runs after a walk and an error by Lou Gehrig had put runners on second and third.

Gehrig did his best to stone for the mishap, when he belted the first of the 50 or more homers he hopes to hit this season after two were out in the last of the 10th but the bases were empty.

The triumph put Boston up at the top of the standing as the only team with two victories. Most of the teams which started the campaign off Tuesday were held idle by cold weather or rain although the "experts" were staged at Washington and Detroit with some 45,000 fans turning out to bring the total for this year's first games up to 148,007.

President on Hand

With President Roosevelt on hand to throw out the first ball and remain through the game to bring good luck, Washington's Senators got off to a flying start before 21,000 customers by trounching the Athletics 4-2. They scored all their runs in the first two innings before "Sugar" Cain and Bill Dietrich settled down to pitch three-hit ball the rest of the way. Jimmie Foxx produced the only Philadelphia runs with an eighth inning homer.

Before a crowd of 24,000 the champion Detroit Tigers lost their first game to the rebuilt Chicago White Sox, 7-6 as Zeke Bonura smashed two doubles and a single, starting each of Chicago's three rallies.

Cincinnati Reds, who lost their own opener, gave the Pirates a taste of their own medicine by beating on Pittsburgh and taking a 7-4 decision before 10,000 opening day fans. Paul Derringer was his frosty but was effective over the route, while Chick Hafey and Henny Erickson did some hard hitting, the latter contributing a homer.

Cold weather stopped the New York-Boston, Brooklyn-Philadelphia and St. Louis-Chicago contests in the National League, while Cleveland and St. Louis in the American were rained out.

Daily Short Story

"LOVE NEST"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The only one who should really be blamed for the entire sequence of events that followed is dapper J. Edgar Marston, the real estate agent. In a sense, he too was just an innocent tool of fate—a fate that threw him together with James Baldwin, sedate business man, and bachelor-by-conviction.

Not that Jimmie Baldwin was to any extent a "woman-hater! Far from it. Jimmie could appreciate a neat ankle as the next man and he could extol upon the delightful eclectic charms of flashing eyes and sculptured profusion. But that's as far as he would go. It was all mental. It never went to his heart.

He was leaning over the bar and hawing himself a night-cap that evening when J. Edgar Marston plumped his elbow alongside. J. Edgar seemed to be in a sorry plight. He looked as if he had lost a tooth or something. He was pathetic.

Jimmie was in a mellow, sympathetic mood. "Cheer up," he bowled, "there's another bus every minute. They're even faster than trolleys."

"How did you know," commiserated J. Edgar, "that I had just been with the girl? Do I look it? Well, I ought to."

Jimmie felt there was no need to prompt him. J. Edgar was quite ready to unburden his heart.

"It's the prettiest apartment in the house. A lulu, a beaut, a humdinger. I rented the entire house—not a vacancy in the place. And this one I had reserved for myself—my honeymoon nest. I could see it. If ever a human being could find the comforts of life—that's the place. So what happens? So Elsie elopes with a hair-net salesman. Can you imagine hair-net salesman!"

Jimmie couldn't imagine. He had never been in love. But what did J. Edgar mean by all the comforts of life? That sounded rather enticing. Yes, rather enticing for a man who had spent the last ten years of his life in hotel rooms—and had found them somewhat so so.

A few more drinks and Jimmie became rather convivial. J. Edgar woke Gil of his despondency, "cheer up! see that apartment," he insisted and Jimmie, incredibly weak.

Maybe it was oversupply of the night cage, or maybe it was the unaccustomed good companionship of J. Edgar or maybe the apartment was really extraordinary charming—but before he retired to his hotel, Jimmie had signed a lease on the apartment from J. Edgar Marston.

Furniture

Thus the staid business man embarked upon a business and career (or whatever you wish to call it) entirely foreign to his nature, disposition, temperament and intellectual capacities.

Having rented the apartment, he discovered that before he can attain "all the comforts of life" he must furnish it. And so Jimmie began snatching afternoons from business to go visiting furniture stores. But the more he visited and the more he saw—the more he befuddled he grew. What to buy? What to do?

Thus after four days of sleeping on murphy beds without any sheets, he decided to telephone Betty Harkins, a young woman he had known for years, Jimmie felt astoundingly abashed and apologetic. But he finally stammered his wants.

"So you see, dear—I've become a householder. But I got to have somebody to teach me a couple of things. What's the difference between a divan and love seat besides the price? Will you help me select the furniture?"

Betty laughingly agreed. She visited the apartment first and found herself overwhelmed with admiration. It was cute and ducky and adorable and charming. Then they started on their storehouse-of-traditions. It took two weeks—with Jimmie and Betty out every afternoon—before they got most of what they wanted. Jimmie was eternally grateful.

Betty had done one thing he did not quite understand. She had made him purchase some kitchen utensils. Then he discovered that on a rainy day it was much more comfortable to cook your own dinner at home than venture forth. Of course, Betty knew how to cook.

Jimmy was surprised to find the tenor of his ways changing so much. In the old days—when he lived in hotels—if he grew weary of himself—all he had to do was just step down to the bar and take a few snifters. Then, he could hop into a cab and go to the theatre. Now he found himself instead putting on the radio and calling up Betty.

He began to feel lonely without her. The place—exquisitely furnished, since there was no denying the girl had taste—was nevertheless empty without her bustling presence. He never knew he could miss a person until he moved into the apartment "with all the comforts of the world."

So he cussed J. Edgar Murston and telephoned Betty.

Elsie Back

But the story doesn't end here. One evening, Betty had come for an appointment and Jimmie had not arrived yet. The bell rang and in stepped a young lady, "I'm Elsie," she announced.

"So what of it," said Betty, rather LOVE NEST GAL 2 . . . . . cool to innocent of the name and something suspiciously.

Elsie burst into tears. "The dirty dog. Anr he swore he would love me forever. That's how love lasts. I stay away for a month and I find another in the apartment I was to occupy with him."

Before Betty had a chance to sob off more revelations in walked Jimmie. "What is this?" asked Jimmie.

Betty rose to her sarcasm. "So you forgot quickly—the girl you swore to love forever. And I thought I had been the first—as you swore that too. Well—Elsie had precedence."

A shade of understanding glimmered in Jimmie's mind. "Elsie," he muttered. "Elsie, Holy cats! How are you Elsie—and how's the hair-net? A myth to make Eddie jealous."

Elsie turned on Jimmie like an aroused cat. "What do you mean sloped. Who ever eloped? What more gossip are you spreading? And the hair-net salesman is just a myth. A myth to make Eddie jealous."

"Well you succeeded too well. Altogether, too well," answered Jimmie. "You drove Mr. Murston close to Bellevue—and me to the verge of matrimony. Supposing I call up Mr. Murston and let him know the state of affairs."

Jimmie proceeded to the telephone and Betty relaxed considerably. Well, Jimmie hadn't started firing before the ceremony at least.

Within fifteen minutes J. Edgar was in the apartment that had once been intended for his honeymoon suite. Betty and Jimmie went out to dinner—and left J. Edgar and Elsie there. When they returned four hours later the pair were still there.

"We decided," declared J. Edgar Marston pompously, "to get married next week. We have suffered enough."

Jimmie looked for a moment in Betty's eyes. He drew himself up pompously. "I too have suffered enough, let's make it a double wedding."

"Great guns," said J. Edgar. "that's what good real estate salesmanship does to this sad little world of ours."

My sister Gladdis and Harvey came over after supper to play Bridge with pop and ma, wich they started to do, pop and Harvey playing serious and ma and Gladdis playing and tawking, ma saying, The Hankers of Cleopatrea are having their next literary afternoon in 2 weeks and the community hasn't decided on a suitable subject of discussion yet. I think I'll suggest the plays of Shakespeer, what do you think, Gladdis, she said.

It seems like a large order, Gladdis said. You mite fall back on good old Robert Browning, he can probberly stand the shock, she said, and ma said, Are we playing bridge or dedicating a lybrery?

"Hah! that's what I was wondering, how about paying a little attention to the cards? Harvey said.

Yee gods, Harvey how about us going literary too? pop said, and Harvey said, Okay, give a sentence using the name Rockefeller.

Sure pop said. Hay bo, catch yo' horse, he's running away, he said, and Gladdis said, My stars, father, how gaaaly!

Now I hope you're not going to keep that sort of thing up for long then, ma said, and Harvey said, Mr. Whitehy was quite an important guy in his time, give me a sentence.

After the kidnapping of Pat from Roger Cecil's motor car, the young Englishman and his mother raced to be buried this day with full military honors, be-hour after hour until they arrived at India's capital. Here, after attending to the nerve-shattered Lady Cecil, Roger sought news of Pat's father.

Grief-stricken, he found that the brave officer was fitting a hero who had given his life in His Majesty's service. He learned of the troops' successes on the Ironiier.

The British were steadily pushing back the fanatic natives to the gates of the Maharajah's own city. Roger had strong suspicions that, somehow, the Maharajah was responsible for the mysterious disappearance of the girl he loved.

He determined to find out. When listen, in England, he had learned in pilot his own airplane. Now his pleadings and influence obtained him a commission with the "Crimson Squadron"—those daring aviators fighting on the battle front.

A Word to Parents

About the boys and girls

The adolescent age is a most critical time
In the life of the growing child.
Boys are developing into men; girls into women.
Whether the future life is to be healthy and happy
Or distressed by nervous disorders of body and mind
Depends largely on the health at this time.
Physiological changes are taking place
Which demand an abundance of rich red blood.
If the body is anaemic a lack of vitality is felt.
If the nervous system is exhausted by school work,
Restorative treatment is a necessity.
Girls especially need help at this time.
Such help as is found in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.
This treatment is gentle and yet powerful
In restoring vigor to the blood and nerves.
Young bodies respond quickly to this restorative.
Color returns to the faded cheeks
And vigor of mind and body is soon evident.

Use Rouge Carefully, Beauties, For Vivid Cheek Bloom is "Out"

(The Beauty Box)

By HELEN FOLLETT

Be frugal with rouge, members of the beauty chorus. The vivid cream is old-time stuff. Instead of painting the factory blush, the modern contingent is concentrating on tickle work with the lip-stick, faint shading of the eye lid. It's all must agree that some faint-toned a bit of cheek coloring. It freshens and beautifies, if properly applied. Placed high on the cheek bone and temples it does something to the eye, brings out their color and expression.

Never apply rouge in a round patch. Nature doesn't use that pattern. A triangle is better, with the point top-point placed just below the far end of the eye.

Puff powder over the rouge, using compact or creamy color as is used. It acts as a friendly blending agent.

Stubborn blackheads on the back of shoulders will give way before a treatment.

Scour with a long handled bath brush and plenty of warm, soapy water. Then dry and spread on lanolin. Then appeal to some invisible member of the family, have her wring out on turkish towels that have been wrung out of steaming hot water. Repeat half a dozen times, and the warm moist towel to remove the cream, dry and apply tinted boric acid with a clean powder pad. That's the way to do it.

Wendy Barrie
Proper make-up brings out glitter and expression

The girl who suddenly decides to top her coiffure, picking dangling ear-rings from her neck and placing a drop her throat, finds herself amazed to find herself a sore-ed. Yasmun Changing the part also makes the scalp tender. The little nerves at the hair line put up a protest.

Girls who wear short socks get knees so dirty that mamma thinks she will never get them clean. There is a way. Rub up a froth of soap in the hands, add corn meal. The small crystals grind out the dust, the starchy substance keeps the young flesh from chapping.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

While Roger Cecil's plane sped to join the battling fliers and Pat, for the third day, was wondering what was to happen to her, the Maharajah was busy with important state affairs. He gave a sumptuous banquet to his subject-rulers.

Toward the end of the feast, news reached him of the defeat of his hired soldiers and the ever-nearing menace of British troops. But upperpost in his mind were other thoughts and plans.

They concerned the beautiful girl he had so treacherously trapped. Eagerly he awaited the moment when again he would feast his eyes on Patricia Cambry's charms . . . Pat was still wakeful at the late hour, she stood looking at the enchanted scene below her window. Suddenly she was startled by hearing someone softly enter the room. No servants ever came thus unannounced. Turning to question the intruder, Pat faced the Maharajah himself!

KILLER OF FORMER M. P. SOUGHT IN TWO COUNTRIES

W. Keith Baldwin Found Battered in His Store

STRANGER SEEN

Victim Well Known in The Eastern Townships

Baldwin's Mills, Que., April 20—(CP)—An police of two counties sought his slayer, the Province of Quebec today mourned the loss of Willis Keith Baldwin, 78, former Liberal member of parliament, realtor, philanthropist and one of the best known men of the Eastern townships.

Canadian and United States police searched for a young, short, blue-clad man, a stranger to this district, seen near Mr. Baldwin's store Thursday night, the night of the killing. A youth, believed to have been in the stranger's company any part of Thursday afternoon was held by authorities as a witness for the inquest.

Mr. Baldwin was found unconscious, gagged and bound, in the general store he operates here. He died while being taken to his home by relatives and neighbors who, surprised to find the store locked, broke in the door. Subsequent investigation by Dr. Rosario Fontaine, Montreal medico-legal expert, showed Mr. Baldwin had suffered a triple fracture of the skull, apparently from 10 blows.

Carried Large Sums

He was known to carry large sums of money but none was found. The till had been rifled of a small amount and the telephone wire was cut. The 100-year old mill, which he always been in possession of the family was inherited by Mr. Baldwin from his father, John P. Baldwin, and was destroyed by fire last week.

The fire was believed of incendiary origin as a kerosene tin was found in the ruins. Police specialized as to whether or not there was any connection between the fire and the killing.

Merchant and lumberman, Mr. Baldwin was born in 1857. After his education at Stanstead College he was with his father's firm from 1876 to 1892, later founding W. K. Baldwin Company. He was a director of a large number companies, including Southern Canada Power Company, Levis Oil and Refining Corporation, Canadian Glass Products, Limited, and was President of Perth Feldspar and Mining Company, Limited and Vice-President of Bourm Gold Mines Limited.

GERMANY FEELS SAFE IN CONTROL OF REICHSFUEHRER

Dr. Goebbels Declares on Hitler's Forty-Sixth Birthday

SELF SACRIFICED

Germany "Like Child in its Mother's Arms"

(By Rudolf Josten)

Berlin, April 20 (AP)—An indignant protest to the powers represented on the League of Nations Council was Reichsfuehrer Hitler's gift to himself, the nation and the foreign powers today on the occasion of his 46th birthday.

This protest was to be handed by the German Ambassadors and Ministers to the respective Foreign officers at the capitals of the various lans nations during the course of the day and was to be given out for publication in Germany at 5.30 p.m. Berlin time.

Hitler himself remained most of the morning in Chancellery. A few minutes after eleven o'clock General Werner Von Blomberg, Defence Minister, visited Derfuehrer to thank him for restoring conscription to the nation. Many ministers later an honor company of the Reichsfuehrer's Army marched by under a youthful chief commander.

Protest Note Withheld

Although the nature of the protest was withheld in Berlin before its publication, political circles generally expected the protest to emphasize the fact Germany re-established of a new "guilt lie."

Not only did the press emphasize Germany's return to militarism as a cause for celebrating Derfuehrer's birthday but presents and messages emphasized this idea.

The league of German civil servants raised one million marks which was given to Hitler for "enfranchising" or in other words for military purposes.

The crown-shirted storm troops were reported to have given a squadron of military planes.

Eulogies For Hitler

Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda, told Germany on Hitler's birthday that "in Hitler nation loves him because it feels itself in his hands like a child in its mother's arms."

The little boy Hitler who guided Germans in nation-wide broadcast Hitler was fanatically possessed of power to save Germany, and in praising Der Fuehrer in his birthday speech Dr. Goebbels declared Hitler sacrificed his happiness and his private life."

Goebbels said although Hitler remains a simple man of the people, he is dangerous Germany. Speaking of the recent conversations in Berlin with Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary, and Capt. Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, the propaganda minister said:

"He negotiated about the question of Europe's fate for two days in 15 hours and succeeded with these statesmen of world-reigning fame in giving diplomacy a new masterly argument and figures."

In glowing phrases the propaganda specialist of the Third Reich declared Hitler was a greater military expert than Napoleon.

Hitler Military Expert

"He is the best trained military expert; he knows when to use the gun better than a specialist. These reports he gives on military questions must be acquainted with the last details in order to snatch him.

He is a man obstinately sticking to principles. Never has he ever changed his ideas. What he has said he had already planned in 1919.

"Unexpectable, however, were the methods which were adopted to the situations in order to attain his goals. Here Hitler declared the spartan simplicity of Hitler and his abhorrence of decorations is the best proof of the Fuehrer's modesty and pride, saying, 'his only decoration is the Iron Cross of 1914 which was awarded him for personal bravery.'

TAKEN TO PENITENTIARY

PRIME MINISTER GOES FOR A DRIVE

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, caught by the cameraman just as he stepped out for the first outing since he fell sick seven weeks ago. Perhaps Mr. Bennett's smile was occasioned by the remark of his private chauffeur, Clifford Allen (also shown) that he was glad to see his chief out again.

Father and Seven Children Burned in Summer Cottage As Coal Oil Lamp Explodes

Alphonse Renaud Took Possession of Shack Last Night

WIFE IS ILL

St. Emile de Loretteville, Quebec, Scene of Early Holocaust

St. Emile De Loretteville, Que., April 20—(CP)—Alphonse Renaud and his seven children were burned to death in a summer cottage here today, when a coal oil lamp exploded and set fire to the wooden shack. A servant girl was the only member of the household to survive the flames.

The servant girl said Renaud was employed by a contractor in Quebec, and that Mrs. Renaud was ill in a Quebec Hospital.

Renaud rented the frame cottage for the summer season and took possession last evening, when he brought his children out from the city. It was empty.

Early this morning the servant girl attempted to light the oil lamp but there was a loud explosion and blazing oil spattered over the kitchen walls. The flames drove the girl from the kitchen.

Neighbors were brought to the house by the servant, but Renaud and his seven children were trapped in the blazing wooden building.

Volunteer fire fighters could do nothing to subdue the fire, which was burned out in little over an hour. Charred bodies of the victims were recovered from the embers of the fire, which totally destroyed the cottage.

Renaud and his children, eldest 13, were insured in their beds.

The dead: Alphonse Renaud; Andre, 13, a son; Jacqueline, a daughter; Paul, a son; Roger, a son; Jean Marie, a son; Antoine, a son; Giselle, a daughter.

Pair of Robins On Peace Bridge Are Protected

Fort Erie, Ont., April 20 (CP)— Superintendent Louis Douglas of the Canadian end of the Peace Bridge today issued implicit instructions to employees that customs visitors must not molest the pair of young robins which have spent the last fortnight in a futile effort to build a nest on a twelve inch ironledge outside of an office window.

Despite the fact the pair of Redbreasts can find 10,000 places where the surroundings are more to their liking, they have chosen the one place presented a barren air. Upon further investigation I found, that they had already planned in 1915.

Unexpectable, however, were the methods which were adopted to the situations in order to attain his goals. Here Hitler declared the spartan simplicity of Hitler and his abhorrence of decorations is the best proof of the Fuehrer's modesty and pride, saying, 'his only decoration is the Iron Cross of 1914 which was awarded him for personal bravery.'

$3,000 in Dresses, Suits Stolen; Loot Hauled Away in Motor

Sprague's Cleaning And Pressing Establishment Entered

Some local residents will be minus their Easter toggery and finery for tomorrow's Easter parade, and all because robbers broke and entered Sprague's Dry Cleaning establishment, 140 North Front Street, and stole practically every movable article in the business, including all wearing apparel, that had been left for Easter cleaning.

The theft was discovered by Mr. Sprague, the proprietor of the business, when he opened his place of business at 7.00 a.m. today. "When I opened the front door, I saw something was amiss as the place presented a barren air. Upon further investigation I found, that they had already planned in the building, as well as tapestries and my radio had been taken," stated Mr. Sprague and he also stated, that no insurance was carried on the articles stolen." It will be a total loss for me and will run close to $3,000.00 I believe.

Local police were notified and upon investigation it was disclosed that the robbers had gained entrance by means of forcing a rear window. The thieves then slid the sash outside the window, showed, that the robbers had backed a truck to the window and carried the goods out to the waiting vehicle, immediately police realized surrounding centres giving a description of the goods stolen to outlying police departments.

The list of goods known stolen include nearly 75 men's suits, all shades and colors, ten men's topcoats, 30 women's dresses, all shades and materials; 15 ladies swagger suits and tapestries. All of the goods had been either cleaned and pressed or waiting to be pressed.

"Its only movable articles, that were not taken from the establishment were the safe, the cash register, the typewriter and they even tried to move the cash register, but apparently found it too heavy," added Mr. Sprague. We carry fire insurance only, so you see it will be a dead loss for me, but I expect the police will have notified the larger centres in ample time to stop the goods before they are disposed of," added Mr. Sprague.

Early this morning Mr. Sprague and Detective Fred Izard motored to Toronto where they expect to co-operate with the Toronto police in the matter of locating the missing articles. Mr. Sprague and the local police being satisfied that the stolen goods were being transported in that direction.

Men's Chorus

Belleville citizens have a right to be proud of such a fine musical organization as the Belleville Men's Chorus as an association of vocalists of the highest calibre, who love for music's sake and in the music for music's sake and in the three years of its existence has developed into a well-balanced and one of the finest singing organizations in Canada. The Belleville Men's Chorus is not a commercial club, but all members taking part for the love of the best in music. Only one recital is given in Belleville each year, the annual concert at which the admission is placed so low that all lovers of music and the best in entertainment can enjoy the program, from time to time the Belleville Men's Chorus has been heard in aid of worthy objects, such as relief funds, etc., the members cheerfully giving of their time and talents for the good of the community.

This year's annual recital will be given in the Collegiate Auditorium Wednesday evening, April 24, and the Chorus will be assisted by Frank Oldfield, of Toronto, Canada's leading-baritone, a great favorite with Belleville audiences. Mr. Oldfield will be heard in songs new and old and his splendid vocal voice added to his pleasing personality will add materially to the excellence of the program and the pleasure of the evening.

A very fine program has been arranged by Ross Hunter, director and the chorus was never in finer fettle or voice.

This promises to be one of the very best entertainments given in Belleville and community pride alone in the splendid organization should fill every seat in the auditorium especially when admission prices are less than half what they should be from the quality of the entertainment.

Belleville's Men's Chorus is famed far and near for its excellence and already rumors have spread to the hinterland that another appearance of this fine organization is pending with the result that applications for seats are coming in from as far west as Cobourg and east to Kingston, as well as from all the Bancroft.

While Belleville Men's Chorus is deservedly popular in all the towns round about Belleville and recognized for its true worth, this is a case where the prophet hath honor our also in his own country, it is confidently believed and this will be proved by an overflow audience on Wednesday evening.

Police News

Although only two arrests were made in the city over the holiday, local police found themselves quite busy. The two arrests followed complaints from East Bridge St. in reference to 2 bellicose causing a disturbance on Thursday night. They were apprehended and will appear in Monday's police court facing charges of intoxication.

Forty transients were quartered at the police station during the past 48 hours, 30 sleeping snuggly on Thursday night and exactly the same number sleeping on the serpent's back on the night of Good Friday.

William Shire, 209 1-2 Front St., complained to the police at 11.50 p.m. on Friday, that during his absence from his home for the previous 48 hours, some person or persons had entered into his apartment and stolen his Easter supply of beverages. Entrance was gained by means of forcing a paddlock on the apartment door. A large case of ale and a bottle of gin were the only articles missing, leading the police to believe that the robbery had been committed by persons having knowledge of the presence of the goods stolen.

Fortunately no motor accidents were reported in the city over the holiday.

Holy Hour at St. Michael's Conducted by Fr. John Knox

Holy Thursday And Good Friday Services at Parish Church

On Holy Thursday evening, St. Michael's Church was again filled for the devotions of the Holy Hour. The Holy Hour was conducted and the sermon preached by Rev. John Knox, S.J.

Basing his sermon on the words of Our Blessed Lord "If you will believe Me for the works that I speak unto you, then believe Me for the work's sake," the preacher pointed out that Our Blessed Lord here shows us how knowledge of others is gained. First of all by their words, people reveal themselves. Then by their deeds, which are by the words they speak. Kind words, charitable words; unkind words, uncharitable words; reveal an unkind and uncharitable person; unchaste, unclean words reveal an unclean and unchaste person. Thus in human relationships we gain, thank God, a knowledge of ourselves and knowledge of others, not to constitute ourselves the judge, "Judge not and you shall not be judged", "I judge not mine own self", said Our Lord to St. Paul "He that judges me is the Lord"—but this does not mean that we may shirk the responsibility of making right use of knowledge gained of ourself and others.

How Christ Is Known

Now let us put the question in the most direct way possible. How do we know Jesus Christ? We have many of His words and as we read them, as in the case of those who heard them, they say "Never man spoke as this." Christ revealed Himself by His words.

He revealed Himself in a clearer manner by His Works. Who is this that speaks the word and a small portion of bread is increased and the multitude fed? Who is this that rebukes the wind and the sea and there was a great calm? Who is this that goes into the Temple the night before the Supper and speaks the word and it is done? "This is My Body, this is My Blood" and insituted a memorial whereby in that Bread He will be with us all days?

To know Him completely in His words and in His deeds we need a gift that will be ours for the searching and the asking—[illegible] gift of faith that enables us to believe, without doubting, all that God has said. The purpose of this gift is that we may become throuht it, the greatest manifestation of grace, holiness and love. "I am the Bread of Life," which came down from Heaven: if any man eat of this Bread, he shall live forever".

Mass of Presanctified

The Mass of the Presanctified, on Good Friday morning at eight o'clock was celebrated by Rt. Rev. J. P. Kidney, V.G., assisted by Rev. J. J. Collins, deacon and Rev. C. F. Baker, as sub-deacon. The choir rendered the music with their faithful.

Good Friday Services

On Good Friday evening the Stations of the Cross were conducted by Rev. Father T. Leacy, Deseronto, followed by a sermon on the Passion of Our Lord. Reading from Luke 23.5, "Beginning from Galilee to this place," the preacher stated that one of the many charges brought against the Church is that she is intolerant. This charge, properly understood, is true, not however, in the sense in which it is often made. Where fact and truth are concerned we must be a measure of intolerance. The mathematician is intolerant; the musician or theorist is not. He is intolerant. So also in questions of nature and revealed truth. There is a God and He has made Himself known to men. He has given us a full account of revelation of Himself in the person of His Divine Son. Outside of Christianity, Christ the person of Christ will not suffice, and for the sake of any so-called peace, His claims are definite and exacting as are the claims of His person.

Compromise Disastrous

The most disastrous attitude that can be adopted in regard to truth is that of compromise. We have a notable example of this in the case of Pontius Pilate. All his efforts to evade the issue ended in turning from the truth, being willing to satisfy the people. He released unto them Barabbas and delivered Jesus up, when he had scourged Him, to be crucified. Pilate might have been one of the many glorious and uncompromising witnesses of Christ had he taken the proper means.

"Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God". You and the truth you teach comes first, I will follow you at whatever cost.

From the banks of the Jordan all down the ages even to this place Christ and His Church stands up and says either to greater opposition and hatred. Where the truth is there must therefore be a true kind of intolerance.

Parliament Hill Hears

When Colin Campbell, newly-acquired member from Frontenac-Addington, so far forgot himself the other evening as to interject "And so, ladies and gentlemen" into his resounding address to the House of Commons, he was merely committing a slip of the tongue similar to scores of others which are heard there from time to time.

His Honour the Speaker is often "Mr. Chairman" and vice versa. Sometime the Chair is addressed as "Your Worship". It is quite common for members to forget that every remark to another member should be addressed through the chair, as Charles W., Bell the other day, when he shouted: "Shut up, You fools!" to the Liberal benches. "Jimmy" Sinn referred to A. A. Heaps as "My learned friend" and called Mr. Bennett, "Sir Richard" in the same address. The prime minister, I believe, once forgot that he was not addressing the Privy Council or the Supreme Court and said "My lords". In the early stages of the present parliament Mackenzie King was always calling Mr. Bennett "the right honorable the leader of the Opposition" and Mr. Bennett occasionally forgot who was premier and called Mr. Mackenzie "my right honourable friend the prime minister."

The lapse I personally remember with much amusement was the reference to J. S. Woodsworth, the member for Winnipeg North Centre who occupies a seat in the "South-east corner" of the House, by one of the conservative back benchers, who dubbed him "the honourable member for South-east Woodsworth".

An ingenious but possibly not entirely vexatious explanation for the long Easter recess, which was passed along to me during the week, was that the George Perley and Hon. R. N. Rhodes are both ardent anglers, and that they wouldn't miss the first week in May at Reach for all the parliaments in the world.

The famous "Eye Opener" of Calgary, founded and edited by the unique figure Robert Chambers ("Bob") Edwards began its existence, it seems in the historic ranching town of High River, and from the isolate of one of the most early issues, (1903) H. D. McCuaig-uodale has extracted the following reference to our prime minister: "Mr. R. B. Bennett, M.L.A., has promised the new Conservative Club a billiard table as soon as they are settled in their new rooms. He has declined, however, to provide High River with a ten-cent table."

A great collection of parliamentary anecdotes, Canadian, British and foreign is presented by Harry W. Anderson, editor of the Toronto Globe. Here are a couple which he told to a luncheon group at Ottawa recently:

"Lloyd George was a master of repartee. On one occasion in his early career he was addressing an audience on the proposed land taxes. Seated in the front row was an English squire of the type most violently opposed to the speaker and his proposed tax reforms. In the course of his address Lloyd George made a direct appeal to this individual for his vote.

"'I'll vote for the devil first,' retorted the squire in an angry voice.

"Quick as a flash the Welsh wizard replied: 'If your constituents so run—will you vote for me then?'

When Sir James P. Whitney, then premier of Ontario, returned to Canada after having been received by Their Majesties King Edward and Queen Alexandria at Buckingham Palace he addressed a political meeting in his home.

When he had concluded—or thought he had—an elderly lady in the front row piped up:

"Please, you haven't told us what the Queen was wearing!"

The Ontario premier did his best to supply the required information.

• • • •

The "Pillibuster" in the Ontario legislature inevitably set Ottawa tongues wagging about the famous blockade of the Naval Bill in 1913. Harry Anderson, who covered it for the Globe, remembers that Sir Herbert Ames used to bring an air cushion and two pillows with him into the House for the sit night sessions. There were provided for members in the lobbies. These 24 hour sessions were a trial for the parliamentarians. In those days there were no press associations protecting their papers against all-night breaks. The gallery members organized into eight hour shifts, so that they could all get some sleep and a little time for recreation.

• • • •

Michael Clark was one of the quickest wits in the House of those days, says the same veteran political reporter. He remembers that "Red" Michael had delivered himself with some heat on the shortcomings of the Conservative government, shortly after Sir Robert Borden had come into power in 1911.

"The honourable member speaks with passion," interjected the Conservative premier.

"Of compassion, sir," amended the Red Deer member, quick as a shot.

That's all till after the Easter recess. Judging by the rising temperature in the House, the Stevens-Cahan feud and other symptoms, we shall have some good "human interest" copy when parliament re-assembles.

Youth on Scaffold Asks Woman Accuser to Appear Asks God to Forgive Her

Smithland, Ky., April 20—An amazed, electrified populace that stood in a natural amphitheatre and watched the legal hanging of 22 year old William Thomas De Boe, last night recounted the fluent words of his sermon on the scaffold.

For nearly an hour—65 minutes to be exact—De Boe, a confessed robber, lectured in emphatic tones to the society that demanded his life for outraging the wife of a Duke, Kentucky, merchant, a crime he denied.

While more than 1,500 spectators from Tennessee, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky crowded the slopes of a hill looking down into the 100 foot enclosure for the scaffold. De Boe poured forth the last reactions of a doomed man.

The crowd was silent when the young white man demanded to know whether his accuser was in the crowd. He was, but she remained silent until De Boe's insistence impelled her to cry out:

"Here I am!"

His first words as he mounted the scaffold in back of the one story brick Livingston County jail at 5.22 a.m. were:

"Is Mrs. Marjorie Johnson in the crowd?"

Silence answered him. Again he asked and again silence. Nine time he asked for his accuser. Then she stepped forward.

Accuser Defends Herself

De Boe, mild, calm, speaking wit; a southern accent demanded: "Woman, are you satisfied?"

His accuser, flustered and excited, defended herself when De Boe asserted:

"If I had $300 or $500 to give her, she would not have made the charge."

Mrs. Johnson flushed and shouted: "Not for a thousand dollars! Not for a thousand dollars!"

Visibly shaken the woman yet stood steady and straight as De Boe cried:

"You would, yet, you would not. "No I wouldn't either!" she hurled back.

Eyes of the assemblage watched her as she defended herself, quite as much as they did De Boe.

From the trade against his accuser, De Boe turned to explain the cost of crime to "you boys and girls here."

"You can see what happens when you do things that are wrong. I robbed, yes, but I am no rapist. I robbed and I am being killed for it, ever do wrong, because you have to pay."

De Boe, referring to Good Friday, reviewed briefly the spirit of the day. "They are even putting me down on the day Christ died. Well, they are doing the same thing to me that they did to him.

"I've made peace with God. I've asked him to forgive that woman, to forgive all."

Closing Overwhelmed

Throughout the entire procedure, the crowd stood spellbound, by the overwhelming oration, by the morbidness of the occasion.

Among those standing on the scaffold with the doomed man was Chief Deputy Sheriff Gabriel McCollister of Livingstone County. He and Sheriff George H. Hester stood on the trap at the scaffold's pale prison. Walter Bailey, Jailer Jim Marshall and Phil Hester were also officials executioner.

As the time drew near for Sheriff Hester to spring the trap De Boe was told he should prepare to go.

"Just me minute—a cigarette, and then I'll be ready," he said.

He was handed a lighted cigarette by Martin. In silence he puffed it and then nonchalantly tossed it down to the ground ten feet below.

De Boe turned to the sheriff and said: "Good-bye Dad," he said to Goodbye Sis. I know you love me and would take my place if you could—that's the kind of love I hold for you, too. It's too bad things had to end this way, but I see you in Heaven, I hope."

Hands adjusted the noose. The prison chaplain began to recite the Lord's Prayer. De Boe's lips were set in a tight line as the black cap was placed over his face. Jailer Martin and Mcclanahan stepped back to the edge of the platform.

"Are you ready, Sheriff" Hester asked. There was no answer. The sheriff sprung the trap. De Boe plunged through. His body snapped at an abrupt stop eight feet below the platform. His neck was broken.

He was pronounced dead 11 minutes later.

Cafes do Rush Business

The crowd began gathering from neighboring communities and states shortly after midnight. The town's three cafes were crowded most of the night. One had to close because it sold out of its food.

Likewise, the Smithland beer garden placed a rush order to nearby Paducah for additional beer as the town's supply was low. The town resembled a Saturday night commercial center.

One hundred special deputy sheriffs reinforced by six special policemen from Paducah, and six state officers patrolled the town's one main street.

TWO-WAY TRADE PLAN DISCUSSED IN BRITISH HOUSE

Belleville Trade Group's Suggestion is Referred to

Captain Arthur Evans, M.P. for Cardiff South, Wales, has written Mr. W. E. Bohaker of the Belleville Trade Group stating that he recently put a question to the secretary of Overseas Trade, Lt. Col. J. Colville, J.P., M.P. in the House of Commons.

Capt. Colville's Explanation

Captain Schuster today referring to the answer of Colonel Colville, said:

"The use of the word BARTER may have caused some delay but we have always and consistently said "Through established trade and balbiting channels," we fabricate nothing in the way of a set-up to handle the goods going and coming and we also make provision for the exchanging of exchanges of cheese, bacon, canned goods, apples, etc., are the produce our $25,000,000 plan deal with. Not wheat or grain but simply such farm products that are shipped to the United Kingdom on passenger liners and passenger liners where cold storage and other compartments are available.

"The more British cargo ships that come over to Canada with bulk cargoes of coal brings that much our door more available transp shipping for our farm grain.

"The word Barter was used by the British press in connection with the cattle and coal deal between the Irish Free State and Great Britain and this is what I mean the ancient trading methods."

The Globe and Mail referred to the proposal of a $50,000,000 dollar two-way trade yearly between Canada and the United Kingdom.

Practical Aid For Trade

"Amid the confusion of such remedies offered for the restoration of prosperity," says Belleville Trade Group stands solid and unmoved. It can afford to do so with confidence, for its remedy is practical and in the end must win out. There is no attempt here to set up a means to revive production and employment, a multitude of wild theories to the contrary notwithstanding.

"This fact is so obvious it is astonishing that the rest of the country is content to sit and wait while the bewildering group of Belleville men is left to push its plan alone. The idea involved is of national and international importance.

"The logic of its inception is as plain as anything could be, and in its progress this logic has not been lost in view. The whole world trade must be revived. The Empire countries got together and worked out a system of exchange. Nevertheless, enforcing this the old Canada was made ready for individuals. The Belleville Group organized to provide momentum, by studying first how the spirit of cooperation could be applied in its locality. They proposed to buy Welsh coal and urge the purchase by Canada of commodities which could be shipped on the return voyage was a natural result. It has been successful within the limits of its sphere, and the idea has caught the imagination of people in Wales as well as in the Belleville community and beyond. The practicability of the plan had been demonstrated.

PREMIER LEAVES FOR LONDON

Premier Bennett is on his way to London to attend the jubilee ceremonies of His Majesty King George, who in May twenty-five years ago, succeeded to the British Throne.

Mr. Bennett was for some weeks ill, but his rugged constitution which has suffered only from overwork of which he had performed so much as a servant of the state, has brought about his recovery after rest from work and anxieties of public office, so that he is able to play a part for Canada in the momentous ceremonies two weeks hence.

Every Canadian recognizes the vehemence and the hard-working quality of the Canadian prime minister. He has thrown his superabundant energy into every matter of importance which has come to his attention during the trying years of his regime. This strenuous manner of living is what makes the premier so admired. Vehement and exuberant in all his work he is a good model for Canadians.

To attend the ceremonies which will mark the silver jubilee of the King's accession will be a bright spot in the life of the Canadian Premier, who has at all times and on all occasions shown his rugged support of British institutions.

That he is able to take in the events of the coming days in the month of May is a supreme satisfaction for the people of this country. They hope, however, that he is not overestimating his strength. One editor suggests that the man whose illness was brought about by fifteen and sixteen hours of work daily, should accept in spirit the restrictions of his own eight-hour day legislation.

EASTER

Lent is at an end and the Christian world passes into the joyous Easter festive season, while all nature is shaking the bonds of the winter, and reviving in bud and root from the cessation of activity during the long months of winter, enters upon the period of growth. In the physical world this time is marked by the revival of life and it is fitting that the celebration of Easter should in change from winter to spring should coincide. Religious historians show that the season of the Passion is the season when the Christian world kept Easter, as the Passion was at the time of the Passover.

In the early church the plan was adopted of utilizing some of the old forms of paganism and in that way to make of the Paschal feast come to be called after Easter, the Teutonic goddess of spring or dawn. The attempt was to establish a new Christian faith, which the pagans were adopting, easily understood. In Latin countries however, Eastertime is known after the name of the Jewish feast, the Passover, or Jewish Festival of liberation from the bondage of Egyptian slavery. The Hebrew at this season recalls the birth of the first independent nation as a result of the exodus under the guidance of God and turns his thoughts to God as guide of the race.

The joyousness of the spring season and the spiritual exaltation of faith in the Resurrection of Christ which is the cornerstone of the Christian faith in immortality of the soul, combine to make Easter for members of that faith one of the two great events of the year, the other being Christmas, marking the birthday of the Founder of Christianity.

The present season is to the Christian the crown of the life of the Master who went up and down Palestine from Galilee to Judaea and who knew his small country as few men today know their own native land, for the Christian believes that the Passion and Resurrection put the stamp of divine approval on every act and word of the Master. Today the social implications of the life and words of Christ are more and more stressed, and many persons, outside the fold of the Christian church, see in His attitude towards the individual and the public the only salvation of the race of man from the morasses of conditions in which humanity can find itself. Gandhi, Oriental and non-Christian in name, says Christ's social viewpoint is the solution. His Sermon on the Mount and His every word and act are of a kind to make Him distinct from all men. They see in the civilization He would bring in a righteous civilization. It is therefore no wonder that His followers find in His every word and act, finality on the spiritual values in life and see that ultimately life is all spiritual value.

The Hebrew has found in the Passover a memorial of the guiding hand which has placed the Jewish race at the top of the school of all religious teachers. Peculiarly fitted they were to work forward towards that clear conception of life values making the work of the Hebrew prophets among the greatest expressions of human wisdom. Christianity as an offshoot of Judaism treasures the ancient Hebrew books together with the 27 New Testament books.

Now these two great religions in many parts of the world observe their great festivals, in Arabia and in Palestine and other parts of the East, a third religion, Mohammedanism, also celebrates. This is a time when religious sentiment is at its highest among men.

The hope of immortality of existence in a world beyond human ken and material forms is in possession of almost the entire human race. It is common to most religions and races, though there are divisions of men who believe in Nirvana or absorption into the Divine as the ultimate end. But Christianity, Hebraism and Mohammedanism which came out of Palestine or the desert believe in life beyond the grave. Life has dignity, meaning and abiding value to those who believe that the grave does not seal everything. Modern science, showing the great contrast between the material world and the wonders of the intellectual and the moral nature helps to support the belief in personality surviving the shock of death. Man's constant driving for the light, the revelation of new realms of knowledge, the practice of wisdom and the guidance of conduct unselfishly for the benefit of other individuals and society, suggest that this life is not all. Doubt seems mere folly, and where there is no doubt, there are probably many cases where the doubt is not altogether sincere, though there are cases of doubt by the sincere. It seems less reasonable to believe that life ends all, that so much quest of truth and knowledge is wasted, that so much self-sacrifice, so much zeal for purity and goodness should end in the long run and must disappear, than that there is a plan in this world. It seems hardly possible that blind law rules so sanely it knows not why.

In the great Christian festivals, the great religious divisions find support of their faith in immortal life.

Christianity has risen Lord, and in that faith knows there is a hereafter which dignifies life on earth below.

WHO WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN?

Lord Byron, in Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, exclaims, "Once more who would not be a boy again?" But a modern scientist has put the inquiry into the form of an informal questionaire and has reached the following conclusion, among others: that "despite depressions, hard work and the uncertainties of the grind of life, few young people (of the age of Byron when he wrote the first and second cantos, 21 and 22) are wholly dissatisfied and would not exchange this section of life without profiting by any experience of the life that has been lived." Five out of six, even including those in the higher decades, would like to live their lives again just as they had before."

But it is those of Byron's age, that is, between the ages of 21 and 24, who seem to be having the most difficult time of it just now. More than 12,000,000 young people, according to the United States Commissioner of Education, have reached the age of employability since October, 1929, and a very large percentage of these "have not been able to take their places as producing and consuming citizens of our society." The Department of Labor estimates that at the moment there are between 8,000,000 and 3,000,000 young men and women between the ages of 16 and 24, inclusive, who are neither in full-time school nor in employment. In Massachusetts a recent survey indicates that the percentage of unemployment among young people is even higher. One out of every two young persons between 16 and 24 seeking work is unemployed.

It behooves the older generation to give special attention to this situation, as is now planned, through the creation of a new Federal agency but through the co-ordination of those already in existence and the appropriation of emergency funds for carrying forward definite projects. Among those recommended are: allowances of $15 a month to 800,000 young people during a period of six months for a combined work and training experience, and grants of $2 a week to provide scolarships for one school year to 100,000 boys and girls.

But besides these and other specific provisions, it is proposed to map a program for other hundreds of thousands, up into the millions, after a "clear picture" of the facts has been obtained community by community. The three major recommendations of the Secretary of Labor were for relief or emergency funds in the amount of $96,000,000. This should be put among the first of the grants.—New York Times.

AND THEY APPLAUDED

Evidently it takes a woman to tell the women of— and get away with it.

A woman authority on etiquette addressed a gathering of her sex in Detroit. She spoke in unvarnished terms and strange to say there were no demands from her audience for retraction of certain statements. Among other things she declared with considerable emphasis that the women of this day and age "are getting older every day," that they diet so much they look haggard," that she wonders "how any of them ever got a man," that the trouble with women's clubs is that everybody wants to be president and after that "honored as founders or what not," and ended up by declaring "they act like a lot of umpty-ump mug-wumps."

That, of course, can be dubbed as using strong language. And the astonishing feature of this "going over" by that the listeners applauded the speaker's remarks with much gusto.—Kitchener Record.

MY JOY

Joy is not an ordered thing,
Portioned day by day,
This much happiness for spring,
That, when storms will stray.

Rather, it is like a bird
Singing, who knows why?
Spun what winds of fancy stirred
Into melody?

Joy is careless where it dwells,
How it comes or goes;
Who can say what charm impels
Song that heavenward flows?

I had thought my joy was spent,
Fluttered from my hand;
I had sought to find content
In a silent land.

Then upon a golden day,
Fairest, lovellest,
Joy rose, like a lark in May,
Singing in my breast!

FOLKS WEARING GAS MASKS in the Western United States to keep from choking on dust, which forms are being obliterated and many ruined, should be a reminder to folks in this Garden of Paradise that a mere flurry of snow in April is no excuse for growling. With the best climate on earth in this Bay of Quinte region folks here should wear that smile that will not come off. Cheer up! The best is yet to come.

RAISING MONEY ON SHIRT-TAILS is something new in the realm of unique modern exploitation to raise money for the purpose of propagating the Gospel, but Chief Justice Hughes, of the United States has a letter which he claims to have received from a ladies' church auxiliary in a Western State, which does just that. Chief Justice Hughes has the letter framed in ivory, and it is one of his prized possessions. Here it is, in part:

"In order to raise money for the church, our members are making aprons from the shirt-tails of famous men. We would be pleased if you could send us one of your shirt-tails. Please have Mrs. Hughes mark them with your initials and also pin on them a short biography of the famous occasions in which they have been intimately associated with your life."

Which illustrates again that Truth is stranger than fiction. No one can dare suspect that the Chief Justice of the United States would be a party to a fake or a falsehood, even to get a laugh at the expense of his shirt-tail.

"NO MATTER HOW GREAT A MAN IS —the size of the funeral depends upon the weather," said Grant Dillon, the sage philosopher of Southern journalism. All of which may be true but the one least concerned apparently is one of many attended the funeral would be the Man in the Coffin, once Great, now reduced to the status of the shell which once contained the man.

NEW YORK WRITERS have not recovered yet from the excitement of the visit of Dr. Dafoe, of quintuplet fame, and Canada. What seems to have "got their goat" the most was the fact that Dr. Dafoe after being shown all the sights of the great city in daylight and darkness, the good things and the things which have an appearance of evil, and being told that he was about the greatest man in the world, just filled up his pipe with good Canadien tabac and remained the same all-human, unaffected individual he has always been as a country doctor in a pioneer district of Canada. Canucks, even when they strike that hysterical trail called Broadway do not lose their heads, as a rule; they just view the passing show from the sidelines and pass on to something better and more worthwhile.

"I say, dad," said the enthusiastic schoolboy returning home, "we gave a wonderful show at school. Lots of parents came, and though some of them had seen it before, they all had a fine time."

"How do you know?" asked his father.

"Why, they laughed all through the play," the boy replied.

"And what was the play?" the parent asked.

"'Hamlet,'" said his offspring.

TRAINING OF CHILD WHO IS EXTRA CLEVER

Difficulties Attend The Training of Precocious Children

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D.
Famous Authority on Health and Hygiene.
Copyright 1935
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

A precocious child is one whose mental development is more rapid than is average. Some children, of course, advance more rapidly because they are given special training at home or are "pushed" in their studies at school. Such spurious precocity, however, does not hold. Stop the special educational forcing and the precocity disappears.

The genuinely precocious children are more likely than not to obtain eminence in later life. Their potentialities at birth are high; they require special attention and understanding.

Precocious children are often egocentric and selfish, there are exceptions, like the star by themselves, do not enjoy play like other children and are not good mixers.

However, parents or teachers are often to blame for these characteristics. They praise and fuss over the children so much that the younger ones get accustomed to considering themselves. They make them introspective and force them to feel superior. And soon such children begin to boast and brag and "lord it over" others.

That such an attitude on the part of one child is objectionable goes without saying. A stuck-up adult, a man or woman liked and no matter how bright he may be, he "stands on his own feet" as it were, so far as contributing to the world is concerned.

Besides, precocious children also tend to be nervous, high-strung and unstable. The process of forcing them along is a severe responsible for this.

Therefore, if you happen to have a truly precocious child, be sure to train him in all branches of practical knowledge. If he is specially clever at drawing, for example, do not stress drawing at the expense of practical writing and arithmetic.

Make him a well-rounded boy and girl as normal, vigorous and healthy as possible. Try to make them good citizens, men and women. It is not altogether an "unmixed blessing to have a precocious child. Such a youngster is always a special problem. What matters it how bright he is, if he is going about a yokel into a queer, unbalanced person?

It would be well if every precocious child could be watched by a physician, preferably one trained in child psychology. The next best thing is to take a child to a child expert regularly each year for examinations.

The danger of a precocious child becoming unhappy and neurotic in later life would be thus avoided. For a psychiatrist can tell when symptoms of mental and emotional disturbance are beginning to form in time to prevent their actual complete development.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

No special argument can be levelled against a wholly vegetarian diet, except that it is difficult by means of such a diet to obtain sufficient protein, sugar, starch and fat without eating excessive amounts. One advantage of meat and fish is the fact that they contain energy in concentrated form.

The ice has been gradually breaking up at the mouth of the river and in the harbor and as a consequence the water has passed away and the water has been allowed to flow from into the bay. In the afternoon following the big jam the water went down rapidly. By 10 o'clock it was within the banks of the river and all fears of inundation were over. The flooded district on the west side of Dundas street, visited by hundreds of people, who made their way from point to point over the large cakes of ice. No one would believe it or even say that all the discomforts of the pieces of ice which were carried such distances, unless they actually saw them. At the intersection of James and College streets, a distance of 300 yards from the banks of the river, there are huge blocks of ice, averaging from 10 to 30 tons, measuring from 30 to 30 feet in length and from 2 feet to 3 feet in thickness and these are piled on top of each other in consideration the strength of the ice and the force of the water the fearful momentum with which they are carried along. The wonder is not at the greatness of the damage done, but that it was not greater; that any building at all was left and that the loss of life was not appalling. The Mayor has been authorized to relieve any pressing cases of necessity which may arise between now and the time the council can take action.

• Maple Leaf Truck Blazes Trail to Sault Ste. Marie . . . Bucks Snow and Floods Leaving Others Stranded on Way

ABOVE: Mr. Walsh and his 1934 model Maple Leaf Heavy Duty Truck, photographed just after arriving at Sault Ste. Marie. Said Mr. Walsh: "It was the extra torque in my Maple Leaf that pulled me out of holes and hills and drifts that had other trucks stopped."

AS THE Sault Ste. Marie Star points out, no silk hats await the truck drivers who open up "spring navigation" along Canada's highways and by-ways. But just as exciting as any sailor's yarn are the feats some of these men can tell about.

Take the case of S. J. Walsh of the Bluebird Orchards, for example. Defying March snow, ice and floods, he started out for Sault Ste. Marie from Newcastle, Ontario — a trip of more than 600 hazardous miles.

Fifty-six barrels of apples were on the platform of his Maple Leaf heavy duty truck, yet the powerful two-tonner made the grade all the way in "apple pie" style. There was not a single breakdown—not even a pause for a minor adjustment. They didn't add any oil to the crankcase—it didn't need it. They got exceptional mileage to the gallon of gasoline.

Read what the "Soo" newspaper has to say about this record-smashing trip. Then drop in at our showrooms. Get the facts about Maple Leaf Heavy Duty Trucks—facts which prove that breaking records, like making profits, is all in the life of a Maple Leaf truck owner.

TRUCK GETS HERE FROM TORONTO

There was no harbormaster with a silk hat awaiting Walsh and the two companions when they landed in the Soo today, but their arrival perhaps raises as much interest as that of the steamer each spring.

It marked the first motor communication with Southern Ontario this season and probably the earliest of a record date, for it is doubtful if any truck or passenger car has previously made the journey against the height of the March blizzards.

Walsh, owner of 400 acres of orchards at Newcastle, Ont., and driving a Toronto, with Walter Couch and Irving Davidson, managed to barge through to the Sault with a heavy truck.

Between Victoria Mines and Nairn there is a foot of water on the road in places, and even more extensive flooding.

The stretch from Blind River to Thessalon took the trail blazers a full day.

"They told us at Blind River we'd never get through," Walsh said. "There was half a dozen trucks bucks up there waiting, and they all turned back. Those waiting to come down from Thessalon and have been there for days.

From Iron Bridge to Thessalon proved the most difficult portion of this record breaking trip. Here the highway stretch. Unused by motor traffic this part of the Trunk Road had presented the most difficult proposition, obviously been traversed by only a few sleighs since more than 40 miles of drifts had to be broken through, in places to a depth of eight solid hours, from either direction. In the meantime, a foot in the afternoon, after the truck had left Blind River at six o'clock in the morning.

The last lap of the journey, from Thessalon to the Sault, was completed by 6 o'clock this morning to noon.

SCHEUNEMANN IS ADJUDGED INSANE

Will be Transferred to Some Mental Institution

Pembroke, Ont., April 18 (CP)—Found not guilty by reason of insanity, Leslie Scheunemann, charged with the murder of Herbert Berger in Alice Township, March 12, today walked in the County Jail his transfer to some mental institution. Yesterday he heard a jury, after two hours' deliberation, declare the verdict of insanity.

The Crown sought to prove Scheunemann killed Berger on the latter's farm in Alice Township and after dismembering the body, burnt it and the farm buildings. The defence brought evidence to show the prisoner had been abnormal since being struck by a falling plank in an accident many years ago.

EMILIE STILL ISOLATED

Callander, Ont., April 18 (CP)—An easier feeling existed today in the hospital home of the Dionne quintuplets as baby Emilie, afflicted for the last few days with a slight cold, showed considerable improvement.

Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, physician to the famous infants, said precautionary measures would be continued this week for the protection of the other babies. Emilie will remain isolated and will not likely take her usual verandah airings for the present.

The "spring fever" as Dr. Dafoe termed it, was never considered serious enough by the doctor or his staff of nurses.

One of the sensational dances in "Roberta," now at the Belle is the double tap routine tap routine by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers to the "I'll Be Hard to Handle" number in the picture. In the dance they literally tap their way to fame, happiness and yet parties which is easily understood.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

WHEN THE GIRL IS TALLER

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Please tell me what you think about a young man going with a girl who is taller than he is.

W. A.

If the girl is attractive, and he is not overly sensitive, I think she's in good luck. What differ. if they are inches in the girl's favor matter anyhow?

We Are Coupled Together at Parties

He gives me presents on my birthday and at Christmas, but I hardly know him. He is always bringing about his collections of things that mean a way of keeping at me, when we are sitting together, and drives me wild. The friends I have seem to think that I love him. But I have tried to find other friends than those I have, but it seems impossible. I don't know what to say about this boy, but I should like very much to be quit of him.

Troubled Tilly

There is no reason in the world why a girl should be obliged to put up with the society of a boy she is ashamed to have out as you have not seem to fit in with any of the young people, why don't you have the courage to drop him?

Try to find new acquaintances in other quarters, through your church, through some extra class work you may take up at school, through the Y, or some such organization. Y haven't given all your better, but from what you tell me, these young people are inclined to be fast, and you're not.

She's Never Had It Easy Like Other Women

My married life has been a very unhappy one, but for the sake of my children I've tried to endure it. They are big enough now to take care of themselves, and I sometimes think I could be very happy.

My husband is so cross to me I'm afraid I may become mild, and he keeps reminding me that I don't know what I'm talking about.

We were well-to-do once, but under his poor management we have lost everything. And I never had it easy like other women. I have had to help him in the fields and do the hardest farm chores. I never have a say when it comes to the household, and no one can tell my husband anything. Sometime I feel like ending it all.

Unhappy

Your letter plainly reflects the monotony of your life, and you should try to get a little diversion. You say your children are grown now, and they probably would have more understanding about the way you feel than your husband. Get them to take you out to a movie some-times. Go to church and to Grange meeting, as I judge you live on a farm.

Go and see your neighbors, and ask them to come and see you. Embroidery and daily grind kill more women than downright sickness, and these kill some of the men husband are too much for anyone. A little recreation is what you need.

"City Editor" by Stanley Walker. Published by Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. 326 pages. This is Stanley Walker speaking — City Editor of the New York Herald Tribune, the most notable city editor of his time"—writes Alexander Woollcott, the notorious Town Crier, in his foreword. "He is the most resourceful and stimulating newspaperman to fill his post on a New York daily since the late Charles Chapin was chipped off to Sing Sing."

Stanley Walker has also written "The Night Club Era"—a story about the Broadway of George M. Cohan. He has been a New York newspaperman for fifteen years, the last seven of which he has been on the Herald Tribune. He is well qualified, therefore, to write what he has called—"a realistic survey of present-day journalism in America." As "City Editor" he discusses the fine points of the craft, its ethics, its philosophy, its history, and its heroes. There are chapters on all the important phases of journalism — "Notes on a Noble Calling," "Fashions in News" "Newspaper Style and Don'ts", "Sermon on Ethics", "The Night Mare of Libel" "The Job and the Men of Journalism", and "The Press Dress Under the Revolution" these are his headlines.

The book is also a "Who's Who" of American newspapermen. It takes much to debunk the hardwood type of editor and reporter. "The acrobatic city editor of fiction" he is not "the hard-boiled sleuth of real life"; says Stanley Walker. He is not "hard-boiled". He does not consume vast quantities of six-inch cigars. He does not "invent strange devices for the torture of his reporters". Nor do "his terrible curses cause flowers to wilt". The fictional reception of the city editor, despite the occasional character suggested by one of the more famous bosses, is generally wrong," writes Mr. Walker. He reveals that the city editor of the New York Times "has been known to write poetry; that the city editor of the Sun once studied for the priesthood; that the city editor of the World-Telegram "is so polite that he has given an assignment to a reporter it seems he is doing all but apologize for troubling him".

Neither is the ordinary American newspaper reporter a drunkard, according to Mr. Walker. He does not seek friends and intimates in the gangsters. He is not a political detective. Nor does he "smash all the signs in sight when invited to a home". He does not "write with one finger on twelve Scotch slip sheets". On the contrary, "he is decent mannered, and in the presence of gentlemen of the press are gentlemen.

How many newspaper readers ever realize the time and effort which goes into the making of a newspaper for which they pay the paltry sum of two cents. Mr. Walker wonders. "Persons who never saw the inside of a newspaper office often ask me, without wondering whether a paper is produced by machinery or some sort of black magic." He believes that Lord Lord Chief Justice of England:

"... do we always judge the press fully, or indeed as justly, as we might of the difficulties of intelligence, care and learning, the wit, the humour, the skill and the versatility, the dutifulness, the courage, the conscientiousness, and the sheer hard work which go to the making of the best kind of newspaper?"

Stanley Walker has written what is virtually "the inside story" of American journalism in the story of a newspaper headline".

"City Editor" has been officially recommended to anyone who writes wants to write, or ever did write or want to write for a newspaper. Which includes, e would wager, almost everyone.

"RADIO" PROGRAM GIVEN BY Y. P. S.

Tweed United Church Group Presents Novel "Broadcast"

Tweed, Apr. 20. — An interesting program was given by the Y.P.S. of Tweed United Church on Monday evening when a large audience was present for the "Broadcast". This unique program was under the direction of Frank Tummon, who had originated the idea and the novelty did not deception by the audience was ample evidence of the success of the venture. The platform was turned into a broadcasting studio, equipped with all the paraphernalia for a successful broadcast. In front of the curtain stood a radio.

A complete program from morning exercises to bedtime stories was heard. Great dramatic capably performed the duties of announcer of Station YPS of Tweed United Church. The various items heard were clever portrayals of programs of radio artistes. The complete program was as follows:

Morning exercises, Frank Shorey (the announcer); news broadcast, Sam Curry; musical hour, Audrey Pruss, Jessie Richardson; Health Scrap Book, Ken Alexander; Hints for the Housewife, Dorothy Bennett; Zinney Music, Alice and Ruth Nicholson; Children's Hour, Edith Nicholson; Hockey Interview, Grant Shorey and Ken Alexander; Kate Smith, Thelma Richardson; Jack Parker, Dr. and Mrs. M. G. Dales, Mrs. Wilbur Fitch; Symphonic Hour, King's Orchestra, S. Luffman, N. Bowers, C. R. Brown, Jeanne Richardson, Mrs. Mills Brown; Bedtime Stories, Grace Reeves; Corliss Sole, Wilbur Fitch; Mills Broadcast, Frank Tummon, S. Luffman, N. Bowers, C. R. Bullins; Devotional, Rev. H. R. Nicholson.

Dr. Dales as Seth Parker, Mrs. Dales as Mrs. Parker, Frank Tummon and Mr. Connor as John gave a realistic, humorous and interesting evening programs from Jonesport, Maine, such as were formerly a regular feature on the radio every Saturday night. Miss Richardson's imitation of these popular artists, "God's Country", "Love Story" and "Dinah" were two numbers given by this group. Frank Tummon's rendition of the splendid "Oh Pray To Me, Gypsy".

The hockey interview of "Ivy" Tweed by Grant Shorey and Ken Alexander for the housewife by Dorothy Bennett, Alice and Ruth Nicholson, Dorothy Alexander were very amusing.

In the devotional period, Rev. R. H. Nicholson, B.A., gave a splendid address "Doing the Impossible". He pointed out that Marconi, who worked with the withered hand, the sick man who had been cut down from the roof, and the man who had been a cripple for thirty-eight years. In the same way God can make the sick man to do the impossible and the sick man to do the impossible as Marconi, who is responsible for wireless telegraphy, the inventors of radio, the steam locomotive and all other great inventions are evidence that people can do the impossible if they have the necessary faith, courage and will to devote themselves to the red-blooded man.

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust, So near is God to man."

When duty whispers low, "Thou must"

The youth replies, "I can".

If you think your task is as big as it can be, and you feel that it is more if you think you are as big as your task nothing is too big for you to do. This splendid address served to close a very entertaining program.

Past Grands' night was held at Tweed Lodge No. 35 on Tuesday Monday night when twenty-six past grands were present from Tweed Lodge, Thomasburg Lodge and other lodges of the district. Rev. H. R. Nicholson of Thomasburg gave an interesting address. A welcome visitor was Mrs. Harry Deacon, Belleville, a former P. G. of Tweed Lodge. Other visitors also spoke briefly. Lunch was served at the close. Noble Grand, Mrs. S. B. Rollins made a very capable chairman. He is one of the charter members who joined the lodge in 1894 and is the last survivor. Mr. Silas D. Pringle of Thomasburg, Clerk of Hungerford Township, is also a charter member, was present and spoke briefly.

Mr. H. W. Bell left on Monday for Picton where he will manage the branch store of the Selrite Store.

Don't wait for summer to wear a white hat — get one for Spring. An interesting model is in natural ballibuntl and is an up-turned sailor, tilted to one side, with a pink camelia in front. Black satin ribbon bands the crown, is drawn and tied to one side.

Butterflies flit in the form of a printed design on a new Spring skit. It is of printed taffeta with white or pale blue butterflies on a black ground. The frock is finished with a doubled butterfly jabot in white chiffon with bow; the sleeved jacket has a one-button-closing.

All of us seem to be interested in new and unusual shades. Model in brown silk crepe, the hip-length swagger-back jacket being worn over a frock of brown and yellow checked taffeta.

A frequent choice is the tunic-length jacket. This is made of the busy woman who is out a great deal during the day. Fashioned of navy blue crepe romaine, trimmed, it usually has pockets and a leather belt. A light yellow and brown mixture tweed uses brown buttons and a brown suede belt. Buttons fasten the flaps of the pockets.

Just a spot of pink, in the form of flecks, in a black tweed suit is responsible for a frilled shirtwaist of pink organdie. Black and pink is ever so good this season.

"Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Copyright 1935
King Features Syndicate, Inc.
WHO GOES FIRST?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When a man is escorting a woman, such as in entering a theatre, bus, cafe and so forth, should he step into the next compartment, giving the door a push so that it will have a "back-draft" for her to continue the push, and then enter the next compartment.

Inside the door she waits until he has checked his coat. Then they go toward the headwaiter. Then as the man wishes, he may follow the headwaiter, to see that he is given his "favorite" table, or that he is at least given a table that is considered convenient and agreeable. Or, if he wishes, he may step aside, indicating that he wishes the girl to go first, and then she follows the headwaiter, and he the girl. Either form is correct, but it does seem to me that the former is the more convenient way.

In a theatre, much the same form holds true. The man steps aside to allow the girl to enter the row of seats. He then brings up the rear to give the tickets at the desk. Then, if the usher seems to be afraid, he may indicate that she is to go first, but he will then follow the usher, to see that the seats assigned are the correct seats for them. The exception to this woman as she goes to her seat in the row. Then, if the seats are assigned seat, no ushers, the man should always go first down the aisle. Then, if he wishes.

2. The man goes first, when he and a woman are entering a car or bus, so that he will be in position to help her alight when the car stops. She then precedes him as they leave a restaurant, and when they their way out. Of course if there is room for them to walk side by side down the aisle, they naturally do this.

SHOWER HOSTESS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I am planning a wedding shower for my sister-in-law. I would like to have twelve girls in all so that there will be three tables of bridge. I wonder if it is correct to invite girls who do not know one another, but all know the bride-to-be?

2. How should I go about asking each girl invited to let me know if she cannot come so that I may invite someone in her place, but still assure each girl that I want her to come.

W.

1. Yes, this is correct, do long as all the girls are close friends of the bride-to-be, it isn't necessary that they know one another — although they usually do.

2. Your explanation that the party is to be a bridge party will do the trick in making each guest realize that it is important that you have her acceptance or regret at once. If you give your invitation verbally, or by telephone, you can immediately explain this, and it will be just as easy in a note of invitation. Something like this:

Dear Jane,

I am planning to give a shower for Mary Allen on Friday, the 10th of May, at my home, at three o'clock. I am expecting to have you come, first because I want to have you come, and second, because I know how devoted you and Mary are to each other. The shower is to be a kitchen shower — some trifle for the kitchen in Mary's new home.

Since I am planning bridge after the shower, I am especially anxious to know which tables you prefer. You will you telephone or write me as soon as you know if this date will be convenient for you? And do say 'yes', Jane dear. I have so much to you, and the hope of seeing you here on the first.

Weddings

BIRD—STAINES

The marriage was solemnized in St. Thomas' Anglican Church, Toronto, this afternoon, of Mary Margaret Catherine, daughter of Mrs. Staines and the late Henry Staines, of Toronto, and Mr. Richard Bird, son of Mrs. Bird and the late Alfred I. Bird, of Belleville. Rev. R. J. Shires officiated. Spring flowers decorated the church.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. J. H. Staines, wore a gray suit with matching hat, white accessories and a shoulder bouquet, the gift of the groom. She wore a corsage of roses.

Mr. J. A. M. Taylor acted as groomsman.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Bird left on a wedding trip to Washington, D.C., after which they will reside in Toronto.

HAMILTON—POPE

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the Manse Parsonage on Wednesday, April 17th, when Miss Mary Pope, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pope of Thurlow Township, became the bride of Mr. Harry Hamilton, a prosperous farmer of Sidney Township.

The bride and her attend groom took their places under an arch of pink and white flowering plants, the background of flowering plants and ferns, where the ceremony was performed by Rev. A. E. Hamilton. The young bride was attired in a beautiful gown of powder blue, with accessories to match and looked very charming. She carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. The young couple were unattended. After the ceremony was performed by immediate relatives and during the signing of the register, Miss Irene Parnham played the Wedding March and also sang with Mrs. Merrick, Mrs. Hamilton. Amid showers of confetti and good wishes the bridal party left for a trip to eastern points.

FLINDALL—MOPLEY

Pinkhill (Special)—A quiet but pretty wedding took place at Seagrave on Wednesday April 11th, when Dorothy Mopley, only and youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Flindall was united in marriage to Mr. Wilbert Flindall, son of Mr. and Mr. Willett and the late Mrs. Moyle. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. O. R. Flindall, brother of the groom.

The bride looked charming in a rose gown made on long lines with fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline, a fagotting neckline and sleeves accordions. She carried a corsage bouquet of sweet peas. Her bridesmaid dress was of blue crepe dresden with coat and accessories to match.

After the ceremony the happy couple left for Toronto and Niagara. On their return they will reside at Smithfield.

Eggleton W.M.S.

The Eggleton W.M.S. met at the home of Mrs. Russell—Stapley on Thursday afternoon last.

The president Mrs. Harry Clarke presided over the meeting with Mrs. W. Harlow assisting with the program.

Several items of business were dealt with, after which Easter readings were given by Mrs. W. Harlow Mrs. Nelson Stapley and Miss M. Wilson.

Mrs. R. Chambers and Miss L. Jo up the aisle of a theatre on Stapley each delighted the gathering by singing a solo. Some of the thank-offering envelopes were handed in.

At the close Mrs. Stapley served a dainty lunch and also a treat of maple sugar.

L.C.W.P.L.

League was held at the church on Thursday night with a fairly good attendance. The Easter and Wesley Lake presided over the Devotional part, after which Mrs. Warren Harlow the social leader took charge of the program.

Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Mina Wilson.

Lenore Stapley sang a solo which was greatly appreciated.

Readings were given by Marion McMullen, Bessie Ruby and Lena and Waterfall.

Mrs. Harlow put on three contests and a game, after which a dainty lunch was enjoyed.

TRAVEL TALK DELIGHTS GUESTS

Belleville Chapter O.E.S. Visited by Toronto Guests

The regular monthly meeting of Belleville Chapter No. 55, O.E.S. was held last evening in the Oddfellows' Temple, Front Street. The Worthy Matron Miss Irene Hallam, presided. A number of members from Mizpah Chapter, Toronto, paid a fraternal visit and were accorded a most cordial welcome by Chapter. The Worthy Patron, Mr. Stewart, of Unity Chapter, expressed their sincere appreciation at the hearty welcome and gracious hospitality made manifest. They brought fraternal greetings and wished for Belleville Chapter every success and happiness for the coming year. The business had been despatched and the Chapter declared closed, the evening was given over to an interesting program, with Mr. A. E. Barlow, Worthy Patron, acting as chairman.

Mrs. Anna Boyd, Past Matron of Belleville Chapter, and Past Worthy Grand Matron of the Grand Chapter of Ontario, gave an interesting and delightful travelogue. In her official capacity, Mrs. Boyd has travelled extensively, and told, with charm and vivacity, of her many experiences. Ocean Trips, Florida and Cuba were some of the places included in her itinerary. The latter gave a graphic description of the scenic beauty of the places she has visited and her commentary on the ceremonials relative to the General Grand Chapter which convened in Tampa, Florida, was of absorbing interest to her hearers. The description of Cuba was especially illuminating. Mrs Boyd illustrated her travelogue with many intriguing curios she had acquired in her travels.

The musical part of the program was beautifully supplied by Mrs. Bernice Grills pianist and Mr. Clare Patterson and Mr. Lloyd Douglas, Bowing, guest soloists. Mr. Patterson was accompanied at the piano by Professor Morgan, Miss Linzie Whitten accompanied Master Douglas Bowing.

The deep appreciation and thorough enjoyment of the delightful entertainment was ably expressed by the Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron, on behalf of the Chapter.

The refreshment committee served a delicious lunch at the close of the program.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE

"Roberta"

Screened as Triple Star Show, Dunne, Astaire, Rogers

Starring Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, R. K. O. Radio brings to the Belle Ontario, today, for four days, a colorful picturization of "Roberta", the musical play which has been creating theatrical history on the stage.

Lavishly produced, the picture retains all of the popular features of the stage play. It also has presented a number of specially brilliant entertainment highlights, including a spectacular fashion show with Dunne's singing, the spectacular dancing Astaire and Miss Rogers, and sparkling novelty episodes climaxed by the picture, which is expected to eclipse even the success of "The Gay Divorcee".

As a stage play "Roberta" by Roberta's, is made by Jerome Kern, book and lyrics by Otis Harbach. "Roberta" opened at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, on November 11, 1933, and closed on July 21, 1934, running more than 300 performances. Kern has repeated that sensational success in road showings throughout the larger Eastern cities.

Kern, known as the king of musical comedy composers, wrote his new melodies for the picture, both of which have become instantly popular hits. They are "Lovely to Look At", a beautiful romantic melody; and "Yesterdays", a sensational rhythm number.

Appearing with Dunne, Astaire and Rogers in the cast are Randolph Scott, Helen Westley, Claire Dodd and Ches. Conklin. Both in good condition. Harry C. Taylor, Shannonville. A30-1t

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Firebird"

A Novel and Unusual Drama Featuring Ricardo Cortez and Verree Teasdale

"The Firebird," the sensational Broadway stage success of a season ago, has come to Canada in way to the screen in a flaming picture scheduled to be shown at the Capitol Theatre beginning next Monday.

The picture, carries one of the most novel and unusual romances, as well as being one of the most powerful emotional dramas of the day. The theme evolves about the struggle of a fine, high minded artist, played by a popular, although unconventional actor over a beautiful young girl.

Born of a proud and aristocratic family surrounded by wealth and luxury, the girl is educated and trained with all the world-wide fullness that her constantly suppressed nature will finally burst forth in a secret and tawdry, although passionate romance, which ends in the final surrender of the actor lover.

The theme seeks to parallel the emotions of the girl with that of the firebird, which is drawn irresistibly to the fire to bask in the glow of the flames. In the story the girl is lured by the weird and sensuous strains of Stravinsky's famous ballet, "The Firebird," to throw herself into the flaming and consuming embrace of a man whose magnetic personality she is unable to resist.

Ricardo Cortez has the role of an egotistical and insufferable actor who first attempts to lure the young girl into clandestine affair, and upon failing, turns his attentions to Miss Teasdale. Verree Teasdale has the part of the mother who has to sacrifice her own reputation and her very life to shield her daughter.

Anita Louise is the daughter, in the firebird, while Lionel Atwill is the father.

Aubrey Smith has the role of a police inspector, while Dorothy Tree, the actress adopted by Will and Helen Trenholme, a beautiful adventuress who diplomat's wife hold, are the two feminine successes, other than the mother and daughter.

Other important members of the cast include Reginald Cavanaugh, Robert Barrat, Hal. K. Dawson, Harold Huber, Spencer Charters, Etienne Girardot.

Added Attractions

A rib-tickling comedy "One Run Elmer", an interesting episode of Movie Snapshots, and a full length of popular movie favourites at work and play and a tuneful song by Bing Crosby Main; complete the balance of the programme.

Matinee Daily at 2.30 p.m. and Two. Complete Shows 2.30: 7.15: 9.15.

Last Times Tonight

"Living on Velvet," with Kay Francis, Warren William and George Brent, and a clever holiday comedy "Out on the Farm". Last Complete show 8.50.

THE LOVE FLIGHT

by Jeanne Dixon

CHAPTER SEVEN

Anne stood in the doorway uncertain what to do. Berta was dabbing at her nose with her apron, muttering maledictions. Furtively under lowered lids, she watched Anne.

Why had Berta been listening at the door? And why were her eyes so venomous? She recalled Berta's backing against the open drawer in her Aunt's room. Berta threatened, "I'll tell Carl alone. He's my ting." "I'll tell" Berta, spitting after the blue car.

Instantly, Anne knew, Berta could tell her about the packages containing Madame's gowns. Anne's voice was a discreet quilting glass.

"Packages are inside on the table." The maid made a great fuss over a spot of blood on the sleeve of her apron. "And I'd thank you not to be bustling through doors trying to kill people."

"Ogles are lucky only to be hurt. Usually they're hung. The packages on the table are not the ones I want. I want those containing the gowns. At once. Madame is waiting."

"Find 'em then if you're so smart. I don't know nothing about 'em." Dah, dah, on the injured nose.

Anne did not know what prompted her next movement. It was made without thought, without will. Self-preservation, perhaps. Unless she found the gowns, and quickly, she would lose her job. She would be alone again, homeless and hungry, drifting again. Her hands moved. The gowns were here, in Bois Joli, in some place known to Berta.

A single swoop and Anne closed the distance between herself and Berta. Her hand caught an upraised wrist, her fingers dug into flesh. She forced Berta backward. The attack was so sudden that Berta, slow of wit, had no comprehension. She sank to her knees, throttling a scream of pain.

"Let me go! Let go of me! You're breaking my hand! She-devil. Let-go!"

"Give me the packages you've hidden. Quick . . . let you go." Strength was like wine in Anne's veins. "Give me the packages or . . ."

"You'll kill me," Berta's flat eyes bulged with pain, with terror. "The packages—in the closet—under the stairs."

Anne flung the wrist she held from her. The cowering Berta fell backward to the floor.

"I'm sorry." Anne reached to help Berta to her feet.

"Go away!" she whimpered. "You take Carl, maybe. You kill me. Go away!"

Weakness was in Anne's knees. Trembling with servitude it had been. Like alley-cats. She turned room. Like alley-cats. She turned and fled through the closet under the stairs. Light? The switch should be there. Yes! Packages on the floor. A whole heap of them—more than she could carry. She'd take as many as she could manage and return for the others.

When she entered the doors leading to Madame's apartment she could hear her groaning. Madame was booming away like an angry surf. There was no doubt Madame was enjoying herself. Anne dropped boxes, piled high in her arms, on a divan.

"Don't tell me they just come. Madame Lorraine? "I suppose the delivery boy was waiting at the door to hand them to you. Maybe you paid for 'em yourself. You was gone long enough."

"I don't know when they came," Anne said, unwrapping the top one and lifting out the contents. "Cherry's after noon, I should say."

"Then where was they?"

"I found them in the closet under the stairs, just outside the package room."

"In the closet! I pay big money for dresses and they get put in closets. Downstairs in closets like they was carpet sweepers."

"There are more." Anne said, unwrapping the second box. "These were in a trunk. I could carry."

"More, huh? More carpet-rags in closets! Send 'em back. Send 'em all set 'em out of my sight. Pa and me sat at home today. And Rita, and Lisetta and my fish slippers. Thank goodness there's once in a while a body can take off their shoes and be comfortable."

. . . . .

It was after seven when Bats and Anne sat down to dinner. Berta served them. She had not removed the tell-tale apron. The red spot at the edge was a bloodshot eye staring accusingly at Anne.

BRITISH FILMS SIGN UP AMERICAN STARS

Madge Evans

Richard Dix

NOAH BEERY . BORIS KARLOFF

Here are five of the prominent American screen stars who recently signed to make British motion pictures. Michael Balcon, English film executive who succeeded in afflicting their names to attractive contracts, disavowed any intention of raiding Hollywood player lists.

When they were alone, Bats asked Anne, "What happened to Madame's gowns? I was afraid you wouldn't find them."

Anne hesitated. Should she confide in Bats? It might be better not to do so, in case Berta tried to brew other trouble for him. Bats had a genuine liking for her and would be the lookout to help and to protect her.

"Berta put them away in the closet under the stairs outside the package room," Anne said. "I forced her to tell me where they were. She means to make trouble for me. Please don't tell Madame. I'd rather deal with Berta myself."

"Um—that one. Bats wagged a large head. Always scrabbling and backbiting. You should tell Madame she'll be rid of her."

"No please. I'd rather not. Jobs are so hard to find. She might be hungry, have no place to go."

"Twould serve her right. That cabbage—she spilled by purpose, because the chauffeur, Carl, asked you to go into the garden. The way the nuns after him makes you sick. She's a little bit crazy, I think. I wouldn't trust her farther than I could see her."

"Perhaps the chauffeur has given her reason to be jealous." Anne was thinking aloud, not fishing.

"Maybe." Bats said cryptically.

Anne placed her knife and fork on her plate in a position to signify that she had finished with them. She had no appetite this evening.

"Is Madame likely to send for me after dinner?" she asked.

The chuckle rising in Bats' throat met the mouthful of food going down. She choked so that Anne had to pound her back.

"No fear," she managed at last. "Madame dines in privacy with her husband. They eat pigs knuckles and sauerkraut, or corned beef and cabbage, or stew with dumplings once a week. They have a feast—all the dishes they can bear home before the master made so much money. They even use a tablecloth that belonged to the master's mother in the old country. Such a funny one—red and white with fringe."

Anne laughed too, in sympathy, but in mirth. The picture of Madame in kimono and felt slippers, dining in Bats' loft with the pudgy little man, from a red tablecloth laden with pigs knuckles and sauerkraut was more pathetic than humorous. Once a week Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Hoag, for instance, ran into the millions, slipped their gilded chains and enjoyed themselves. The remainder of the time they were in harness, straining to get themselves started towards the heights of social grandeur to which their ambitions and great fortune entitled them.

. . . . .

There was a noise that night. At ten o'clock Anne turned out the reading lamp by her couch. The unusual events of the day had tired her; better get plenty of rest for to-morrow. Madame would want to examine the new gowns, try them perhaps, and that promised to be an ordeal.

Anne's window was a square of radiance through which moonbeams splashed on the floor. The garden was flooded with silver light. A land breeze carried warm breaths of fragrance as made her senses swim.

For a long time she was lost in wonder of the enchanted scene beyond her window. She was turning away, reluctantly, when her attention was arrested by a moving figure at a distance. Some one was coming from the garage. Carl? She felt that queer tightness in her throat, that warm sensuousness about her breast. The normal pulse of it bothered her. And yet it was more than disquiet.

If the figure was Carl, and he'd look up at her window, she would be safe. She stood as still as Lot's wife, turned, raised an arm and waved to the direction of the garage. Some one was watching from the garage, from behind the screen of shrubs, for that signal. There was more than one back-stairs Juliet in Bois Joli. Anne tightened in her throat,

Prospects for Bigger, Better Easter Parade

Prospects for a bigger and better Easter parade in this city on Sunday appear promising to say the least, according to the comments of Front Street merchants, when question on the subject recently.

"All we need is good weather and some sunshine between now and then. Business has been fairly brisk for this season of the year, and our sales are well up to expectation, even if the backward weather of a week or so cut down some of the store attendance and the profits," was almost unanimously voiced by store owners through the business section.

"If we have a day or so of sunshine and bright weather between now and Easter Sunday I don't believe any of the merchants will have any complaints regarding Easter trade, and up to the present business has been fairly good", stated Mr. John McIntosh, president of the Belleville Retail Merchants' Association.

Psychologically speaking it's a good thing for people to dress up at Easter time, pointed out another well known businessman, "it is good for either a woman or a man to get all togged out when they can, and parade their new finery. It sort of tones them up for the summer ahead. It rids them of the winter's gloominess and gives them a new outlook on life. I'm all for bigger and better Easter parade.

"The lateness of Easter this year should guarantee a good turnout along the sidewalks of Belleville, and I believe this Easter will produce more well dressed men and women than for some time past, judging by the sales in my store," said another merchant whose stocks range from hats to spring coats.

This year, it has been noticed, the young men of the city have rid themselves of their inhibitions as regards sartorial splendor and have gone shopping on a bigger and more colorful way. The brighter tone of their hats alone this season is only one indication of a return to mid-Victorian elegance on the part of youth of the male sex who will join the ladies on their Easter stroll if the fair weather holds out.

10 HOME RUNS IN BALTIMORE MONTREAL TILT

International Always Known as Hitter's League

TORONTO WINS

Defeat Syracuse 3-2 by Smart Base Running

By The Associated Press

If the first three days of the International League season can be taken as an accurate guide, the loop as a whole has become home-run minded to the nth degree.

The International always has been known as a hitter's league but not even in its palmiest slugging days has there been so large an early crop of home runs. Only 10 games have been played so far and 34 wallops have sailed over the fences, 14 of them at Baltimore and eight at Newark.

The Montreal Royals' 7 to 6 victory over the Orioles at Baltimore yesterday was a 2-hit slugfest in which 10 home runs were made, five by each team. Baltimore assumed a 6-5 lead with a four-run rally in the eighth but the Royals came back with two in the ninth to win their second decision in three games. Mayo, Barton; Sweeney, Purcell and Gibson were the home run clouters for the Orioles; Stack, Pitts, King, Ripple and Dugas for the Royals.

After the batsmen had dominated the first two games, Toronto and Rochester got together in a 10-inning pitching battle; which the Bears won 3-2, to hang up their second triumph in three days. Porter Taylor's single scored Nolen Richardson from second with the winning run. Jake Flowers singled in the only home run of the day.

Rimac on Top

The Buffalo Bisons went to the top of the standings with two victories and no defeats by taking the hapless Senators over the limit, 8-2 and 10-inning duel. Bill Harris, who held the Senators to the three hits, scored the winning run, nicking Jimmy Cachioni for a double and coming home on a single by Greg Mulleavy.

Toronto opened the series with Syracuse, with a 3-2 victory gained by smart base running. Clarkson Rich scored the first Toronto run on a double steal in the second. In the fourth after Crouch had scored the second run, Hamley stole second and came home with what proved to be the winning counter on Miller's single.

(Albany and Toronto will play a doubleheader at Albany Sunday, Secretary William J. Manley announced. The Monday game has been advanced one day.)

SWIM MEET AT ALBERT POOL

City Championships in All Classes Will be Awarded

Following the inter-city swimming meet held at Albert College Pool a short time ago, which was the most favorable comments from the general public as well as greater than usual interest in the local swimmers.

Because of the interest displayed in that meet and with the object in view of giving more local swimmers a chance to compete, it has been felt by parties interested, that a city championships would be very much in order. Getting to work on the idea, the swimming committee of the local Y.M.C.A. under the chairmanship of E. H. (Bucky) Calder, have completed arrangements to hold the City Indoor Swimming Championships at the Albert College Pool on May 2nd and 3rd. Principal Howard and his Associates at the College are giving their wholehearted co-operation and everything is being done, that will tend to make the initial city wide meet a big one, and, success.

Although some excellent awards will be made the winners of each of six divisions into which the entrants will be divided for competition, there will be no entry fee. However all entrants must fill in an entry form procurable at the office of the Y.M.C.A. stating the events they wish to enter and the latter to be turned in to physical director Morden at the not later than April 30th. The preliminary heats in all events will be run off on Thursday May 2nd with the finals on May 3rd. The complete program with rules for competition will appear in a later issue of this paper.

"Cy" Blanton, Rookie Hurler, Restricts World Champions To One Hit and Wins 3-0

Threw Fast Ball by The Batters All the Afternoon

ROOKIES' DAY

Dodgers in National Takes Double Bill From Boston

By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr. Associated Press Sports Writer)

The first outstanding pitching feat of the 1935 Major League season goes to the credit of a rookie named "Cy" Blanton, strikeout king of the International League who came up to Pittsburg just in time for one losing appearance last season.

Making his second Major League start yesterday, the 27-year-old right hander from Waurika, Okla., started throwing his fast one past the world champion St. Louis Cardinals just the way he used to do it for Albany, when he once fanned 20 rivals in one game. He faced only 31 batsmen, granted only one puny hit—a single by Spud Davis in the second inning—let only four runners reach first and none third, struck out six and wound up with a well-earned 3 to 0 triumph.

Three bursts of base hits in the third brought all the Pirate runs as Cookie Lavagetto, Tom Padden, Paul Waner, Babe Herman and Arky Vaughan all connected for singles off Bill Hallahan.

Blanton, however, wasn't the only pitcher nor the only "freshman" to perform brilliantly yesterday. Silas Johnson, who was charged with 22 cincinnati defeat that began one-sided his new campaign by shutting out the Cubs 4 to 0 for the Reds' third straight triumph. John Whitehead, a first-year man from Dallas, completed the veteran Fred Marberry on the hill, limiting the Detroit Tigers to six hits to give Chicago's White Sox a 2 to 0 triumph and Lefty Grove, the lanky "iron" man of the Red Sox, chalked up a victory in his first start although he was taken out for a pinch hitter in seventh, when Boston scored all of its runs that brought a 10 to 4 triumph over Washington.

National League

Lefty Watson Clark and Johnny Babich of Brooklyn also drew down a share of the hurling honors. Each went the full route to beat the Braves 4 to 2 in the Patriots' Day doubleheader. Clark also drove in two runs in the opening game while Babich, who fanned Babe Ruth three times, got the benefit of Danny Taylor's first inning home run with Ethan Allen, tall, thin pitcher who all the Dodgers' afternoon runs.

On the hitting side the Philadelphia team took most of the headlines. Pacific by Ralph Comiti, who banged out two homers for a total of four in two days and knocked in seven runs. The Phillies have received out 21 hits and an 18 to 7 and 11 to 6 double victory. The athletics took the home run route to a 6 to 5 victory over the Yankees, that completely ruined the Bronx American League debut. Bob Johnson duplicated Taylor's feat of hitting a homer with the corners crowded after which Moses had wasted Malone's second pitch for the full distance.

EDMONTON GRADS GIVEN WELCOME

Coach Page Predicts Three Straight Victories

Windsor, Ont., April 20—(CP)—The Edmonton Commercial Grads, Canadian women basketball champions today received a civic reception, when they arrived at the city limits, tonight take the gym court here to defend their laurels against Windsor-Walkerville alumnae.

Coach Percy Page has predicted a straight three-game victory for his team, which he says is as great as ever, with several new stars in the lineup.

The 1935 edition of the Grads are entered in an age group with 15 other teams, that Coach Page has declared to victory in as many seasons. Page believes that Noel Macdonald, five feet 10 inches tall centre and forward who has been with the team two years, will turn out to be one of the greatest women players the east has ever known. He has led the team's scoring during most of the season.

"Red" Dutton May Manage N. Y. Amerks

New York, April 20.—(CP)—Appointment of Mervin "Red" Dutton as manager of New York Americans of the National Hockey League is expected to be announced shortly by William Dwyer, club owner, it was learned today from reliable sources.

Dutton, outstanding defenceman with the Amerks since he came down from the west via Montreal Maroons, will be given the assignment as soon as possible, it is reported, in order he may negotiate deals immediately for strengthening the Club that finished in fourth position in the Canadian section race last season. It was Dutton who was chiefly responsible for assembling the Art Chapman, of Winnipeg, Lorne Carr and Dave Schriner of Calgary, line, considered last winter on a par with 1935 best, in the League.

If Jim Calpay road engineer gets the job he will succeed Joe "Bullet" Simpson, Smith's fisherman, who has led the team through the last two campaigns.

WRESTLING BOUT FRIDAY NIGHT

Kiwanis Club Sponsors Fine Card to Open Season

Shortly before noon today George A. Lee, sports chairman of the Kiwanis Service Club, announced, that the opening wrestling card of the season would be presented by the Kiwanis Club at the Belleville Arena on Friday night next. Three fine bouts have been arranged by the promoters bringing before a Belleville audience at least four new faces.

Otto Yonberg, German at 201 will meet Jim Wilkins of U.S.A., while Sunny Dunlop, local favorite, is matched with Johnnie Griffity, in a return bout. Two other new boomers include Jack Horman of Michigan, 200 versus John Dallas, the Southern veteran, who is making his initial Canadian appearance in the ring.

The Kiwanis Club feel, that they have procured the very best talent for their opening bout and expect a bumper crowd to usher in the 1935 indoor wrestling season at the Arena next Friday night, popular prices having been announced.

JOHNNY KELLEY WINS MARATHON

Dave Komonen, Winner Last Year, Finds Pace Too Hot

Boston, April 20 (CP)—The marathon world hailed a new monarch today as youth and endurance received a coveted trophy from the aging grasp of veteran Dave Komonen.

Johnny Kelley, 27-year-old Arlington, Mass., runner, won the Boston marathon yesterday. Kelley, who placed second to Komonen, Sudbury, Ont., mine carpenter, in 1934, led home the field of 190 by covering the grueling 26 miles 385 yards over hill and dale into Boston in 2:32:07.4. Komonen failed to finish.

Second in the race was Pat Dengis of Baltimore. First of the 13 Canadians who finished the course was Dick Wilding of Mount Dennis, Ont. the Monarch A.C. runner from the Toronto suburb was clocked in 2:39:20, while Dengis' time was 2:34:11.2. A crowd estimated at from 250,000 to 500,000 watched the race along its route.

Komonen, hailed a year ago as Canada's premier marathoner, appeared to have passed his prime. He dropped out of yesterday's grind at the halfway mark, recalling a similar performance in the British Empire games trials at Hamilton, Ont., last summer. On that occasion, a scorching day, the veteran Finn found the going too keen. Harold Webster, Hamilton's amazing old-timer won.

Five of the Dominion's contingent placed in the money yesterday, being Wilding, they were Vic Callard of the Toronto Monarch A.C., ninth; Frederick Bristow of Mount Dennis, 14th; Jim Shaw, of Monarch A.C. 15th; Fred Mowbray of Mount Dennis 24th and Grant Hockley of Toronto 32nd.

The ageing Demar finished 18th, while Leslie Pawson of Hamilton R.I., who set the record time of 2:31:31.6 in 1931, ranked 28th. Jimmy Heinigan of Medford, Mass., another former winner, was 11th.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

To date exactly nineteen teams have affiliated with the local Ki-Y Softball League for 1935 competition. Of this number the bantam series is apparently the strongest group of the league, that is if quantity determines the relative strength of a softball loop. At any rate Secretary Ralph Morden has received ten applications from various bantam softball teams throughout the community. The midget series is progressing nicely to, seven teams being registered in that category. The minimum series, under nineteen years, is the only group not to have sufficient teams to make matters interesting, that is as yet. There have only been two juvenile teams link up with the Ki-Y Leaguers to date and at least two more are needed before a good group can be assured. Surely there are sufficient teen age boys in Belleville to muster two or three more juvenile softball clubs and assure the loop of three good, serious-minded, bantam and midget clubs. Secretary Ralph Morden has plenty of ball grounds available for games at the Y.M.C.A., which he will gladly turn over to early August fixtures, incidentally the entry list closes early next week, so those interested are urged to "step on it."

George Lee, salesman of local Kiwanis sporting activities, called today to assure us that their season's initial wrestling card would be held on Friday night. "You see we had planned on opening the wrestling season at the Arena on Tuesday night, but recently we were informed, that by picking a date after the Toronto wrestling nights, we would be afforded a "first class card of wrestlers", stated George Although he would really confirm the Friday night as the return of the "Front and Centre" artiste to our fair city. "You know full well, that Thursday has been known as "rassling night" in Toronto for years and I've been informed that by playing our shows in Belleville on a Friday night we can be assured of some real topnotchers, that is after we get our local following assured", added Mr. Lee.

The sympathy of the local sporting fraternity is to be afforded Mr. and Mrs. Roy Overt upon the death of their infant months old son, Ronald Roy.

Ponzi, the American billiard and pocket billiards expert, entered into the spirit of the afternoon sulldugerry in Ft. Myers, Fla., while the Athletic were playing there recently. He was on the way from Miami to St. Petersburg to fill a cue engagement when his car broke down near Ft. Myers and he had to lay over for the night. News-paper scribes recognized Ponzi and induced him to have some fun with the ball players.

* * * *

Al Horovitz of the sports staff of the Philadelphia Evening Leger went to Ed Coleman and told him there was a "little awed-off punk" at the hotel looking for a game of pocket billiards. "I'll take him," stuttered Big Ed. He was introduced to the fellow and they agreed to play for a small stake. Ed broke and nibbled and then Ponzi ran out the string. After that exhibition, the scuffler decreed sudden disinterest in pocket billiards.

Ponzi also tring the same stunt on several other baseball team visits. The joke was then explained and the players returned the small stakes he had won.

Unless there are many changes in their plans, the local Belleville United soccer football team will endeavour to hold sway on Coleman

What price SPACE MR. ADVERTISER?

Space in a daily newspaper possesses a power that is lacking in the lineage of other advertising media.

It is not only more economical . . . which is a matter of easy computation . . . it is not only more flexible, it is not only more timely and rapid, but also it is the advertiser's unfailing point of contact with the mass market at every spot marker of the Dominion of Canada.

The Daily Newspaper possesses a power by means of which an advertiser, who knows how to use it, can reach and move to action all or any part of the Canadian consuming public.

In this North American continent there was spent during 1934 in the columns of the daily newspapers more than $500,000,000. The strongest of all supplementary media was used to the extent of $114,000,000. Why?

Because for prompt action on sales plans . . . for quick consumer influence at minimum cost . . . for willing co-operation from the retail trade, the daily newspaper is today, as it always has been, the outstanding and most economical basic advertising medium.

"LIVE and LEARN"

(Copyright, 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Yes, sir, an old timer like me has to have a certain philosophical attitude in life to get along. Understanding young folks—and I thought I understood them until the other day—helps to make life happier.

As I said, the other day something occurred that made me—as the saying goes—sit up and take notice. I thought I knew all the tricks of the game, but even an old codger like me can learn something about life and love. Of course, what happened didn't put any black mark against my record in the world—but to me personally—well, it just made me see life at another angle.

It all began when Peter Trader came down here in South to live. He was a Northerner and people were kinda cool to him at first. Well, for the first couple of months he didn't mind it—fixing around his house and things, but when he did come around to it he felt kinda blue. That's when he came over to see me.

I told him the southern people were like that ever since the Civil War. We got talking about one thing and another and I discovered that he liked fishing. Well, right there he became a friend of mine. It wasn't long before we were pretty chummy. He told me that he liked the peace and quietness of the South—always had—and had left Broadway and all the glitter for it.

Well, introduced him around. The people was kinda offish and cold to him at first, except for Ma and Jean Williams. She seemed to take right to him. Soon they were going places together constantly.

It wasn't long before that when Pete came over to my shack and we got talking about Jean. . . Bill told me that he thought he was crazy about her—even wanted to marry her—but she seemed to shun him. He was always at her beck and call. I guess that was what spoiled it.

Jealousy

There was only one thing to do in a case like that. Play one against the other. You know, get another girl, a pretty one, and make Jean jealous. Then she would see the light—that is, if she really loved the boy.

Well, I thought it over after Pete had left. I wrote a short letter to my niece over in the next county. I knew she'd help me—all I had to do was ask.

Two days later, Ruth Meyers, pretty as a picture and full of life, arrived. I told her my plan and at first she would have none of it, but I finally won her over. I introduced her to Pete—and he seemed to like her too. When I explained it to Pete he didn't think it could work out.

When Ruth finished talking to him like a dutch uncle he finally agreed. The next evening Ruth and Pete went dancing at the Blue Parrot, where they knew Jean would be. Well, Pete says when she saw them together she just stared and stared.

My idea seemed to be coming along pretty good, I thought. Because each night Ruth and he would be out together. Of course, Pete did have dates with Jean — but when she was with him she never mentioned the other girl.

Then to add to Pete's woes, Tim Johnson began rushing Jean. But Pete didn't act as bad as I thought he would.

The Show-Down

Well, the whole thing came to a head the other night at the Blue Parrot Club. Pete had taken Ruth. They had no more than seated themselves when who should drop in but Jean and Tim. This time Jean came right over to Pete's table, and of all things asked him to dance with her. Jean's dark eyes were flashing as they returned to the table. She left immediately. Anyone could see her anger.

Pete and Ruth sat talking. Ruth looked over at Jean's table and said, "It looks like our plan worked, Pete. Yes, sir, the plan has worked perfectly!" she repeated. "Now I guess I'll go back home—"

Then Pete said, "You'll do nothing of the kind. I've learned something since you've been here. I have discovered I don't care about Jean at all, it's you, darling, I love. Can't you see why I have been trying to avoid Jean for the last few days. We just finished everything on the level and told her it was you I loved."

Well, I guess Ruth "saw"—because they were married the next day.

TRANSIENT BREAKS LEG ON CAR RAIL

Removed to Hospital Where Fracture is Reduced

Clinging grimly to the iron hand rail atop a C.N.R. box car, a transient giving his name as James Anderson, escaped serious injury from his lofty perch by nearby police yesterday afternoon and found to be suffering from a broken leg.

The clip-headman was discovered and the injured man rushed to the Belleville General Hospital, where it was discovered that the fracture was above the knee on the right leg. The fracture was reduced and the patient is reported to be resting quietly. His relatives in Ontario were notified of the incident by local police authorities.

Anderson's presence on a car store as related to the C.N.R. police, who caused him to be boarded a fast C.N.R. freight at Kingston Road yesterday morning. Upon the arrival of the freight here, Constable Bert Anderson was pounded on the car-walk, when, to the police's speedily hunting Anderson's person on from her, boarding his leg. Anderson could not get down from his perch on top of the car and was forced to cling grimly to the hand rail in order to keep from falling from his lofty perch. It was in this position that the O.N.R. police found him and later rescued him.

DIRECTOR TELLS OF TRADE GROWTH

Chamber of Commerce Directors Welcome Back M. Robertson

At the regular weekly meeting of the Belleville, Chamber of Commerce directors on Thursday, Mr. Mosher, presiding, welcomed back to the city by his fellow-directors after an absence from the city since March 5th, during which time he visited Hamilton, Niagara Falls, Niagara, and Kingston, Jamaica. In responding to the welcome extended to him by President J. R. Boyce, the latter of the directors, Mr. Robertson gave a brief, but interesting account of his holiday trip and especially commended the very excellent service which is given by the Canadian National Steamships Lines between Canada and Montreal and the West Indies. As a result of his experience on the steamship company in establishing this first class service, the Inter-Empire trade opportunities would be materially increased.

In the absence of the secretary-manager, Mr. J. O. Herity, Mr. E. P. Bernstein, vice president of the Chamber, read the minutes of the last meeting, which were duly adopted and seconded. Mr. H. W. Hinman was then appointed by the acting chairman for the active campaign of the Boy Scouts' Trust Association to be held during the week commencing April 29th, and will be available soon. It is expected that beneficial results will be obtained this year. Mr. A. J. Wills, a past president of the Chamber of Commerce, was then appointed to accept the position of president of the association and has entered enthusiastically into the work connected with the office.

Those at the meeting were the President, Mr. J. R. Boyce and directors, Messrs. H. W. Hinman, Mackenzie Robertson, W. C. Sprague, E. V. Illey, Les. R. Riggs, H. E. Mallory, H. W. Ackerman and H. H. Morton.

EDUCATED AT QUEENS

LOWELL, Mass., April 20.—(CP)—The death early today of Rev. John Pringle, United Church minister, aged 58, with pioneer days in the Yukon Gold Fields and reputed Canada of one of her foremost missionaries to Japan.

Lt.-Col. Pringle died in a hospital here, while he was enroute to his home in Sydney, N.S., from Portsmouth, N.H., where he had been visiting relatives.

Dr. Pringle was a native of Chatham, Ontario. Educated at Prince of Wales College, Dalhousie University, Kingston, and Dalhousie University, Halifax, he was ordained as a minister of the Presbyterian church in Canada at Georgetown, Ontario.

I was very nervous, and had no appetite. I felt sick and dizzy, and had a bad taste in my mouth. I had a bad cough, and was very weak. AH! BEAUTIFUL SPRING!

When the barbaric sounds of the zoo animals are heard, the imprisoned denizens (released at last from their winter quarters) start to stretch, strut, sniff and paw each other. In a few days, however, then you'll know that spring is here. RELOW is shown a touching "necking" scene as Mr. and Mrs. Giraffe show their affection. At TOP are two elephants—completely love-struck. Mrs. Pachyderm is veritably in a "dimy" from love that he can hardly stand straight, trunks are entwined, and a soft elephantine gleam glows softly in their eyes. Ah, springtime!

AMELIA EARHART BLAZES NEW TRAIL

Nothing Sensational About Flight She Says at Start

Burbank, Calif., April 20.—(AP)—Amelia Earhart was blazing a new trail in the skyways today on a non-stop flight to Mexico, D.F.—a trail no other woman has made above before.

The conqueror of both the Pacific and the Atlantic and holder of the United States transcontinental non-stop record for women, took off from the Union Air terminal at 9.55 p.m. last night, (12.55 a.m., Saturday, E.S.T.) and headed her big red monoplane for the capital city of the southern republic.

She had hoped to depart unannounced and in a brief reticent conversation before the take-off, declared there was "nothing sensational about my flight."

"I'm not after any record," she said, "it's just a good will trip, and I don't think I'm news for the night."

The flier was barehanded as usual, as she climbed into the same plane which she used in her Pacific ocean hop.

Miss Earhart, who carried a cargo of air mail, said she hoped to reach her destination in 12 or 13 hours, and explained she was not seeking to erase the record of Leland Andrews, eight hours and nine minutes "because I haven't the machine."

Originally Miss Earhart had planned to follow a direct compass course 1,700 miles to the Mexican capital, but after obtaining later weather information she decided to fly down the west coast, possibly as far south as Guadalajara, before swinging east.

KANSAS STILL LOOKS FOR RAIN

Dust Belt is Rapidly Being Re-adjusted to Situation

Kansas City, April 20 (AP)—They still are looking for more of those clouds with the wet lining out in the high plains states of the West. Clouds left downpours ranging up to two inches in sections of Oklahoma and Texas. They have favored Eastern Kansas, Missouri, and sections of Nebraska with lighter showers, and left much snow in the Rocky Mountains.

But they have passed up most of the United States dust level with nothing more than tantalizing gestures. During the week hazy clouds of dust have moved over the area, comprising Southwestern Kansas, the Oklahoma panhandle, the Texas panhandle, Northeastern New Mexico and Southwestern Colorado.

Outside of this sector, especially to the north and east, more moisture is needed.

The outlook by states:

Oklahoma—H. D. Blood, Federal statistician, reports with the exception of the panhandle there are excellent prospects for pasture, wheat and oats.

Conditions in Texas touched the panhandle section, but O. B. Martin, the state crop reporting service director, said indications were most of it fell in the eastern part, which has suffered the least from wind erosion.

Kansas—F. K. Reed, Federal crop statistician, said while light rains in Eastern Kansas resulted in some improvement in the crop outlook, prospects declined materially in some parts of Western Kansas due to dry weather and dust storms.

Colorado—Wind damage continues in the southeastern part of the state, and Hubert L. Collins, agricultural statistician, says no field work will be possible until it rains.

Nebraska—Wheat in the southcentral section is reported dying but A. E. Anderson, state and federal statistician, said he was unable to tell why. He believes none of it will be saved by recent rains.

CHORLEY PARK IN TORONTO FOR SALE

Premier Hepburn Adamant in Closing Residence Lieut. Governor

Toronto, April 1.—(CP)—Chorley Park, official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, is for sale.

While there are no "For sale" signs on the spacious lawns of the Government House in Rosedale, whose present incumbent is Hon. Dr. Herbert A. Bruce, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn early today declared if an adequate offer was made for the place, it would be accepted.

His statement came during discussion continued in the Legislature after it was announced from October 31, the Ontario Government will vote only enough money to maintain Chorley Park in "idleness" and if the Lieutenant-Governor wishes to remain there and provide the balance of the expenditure, it rests with His Excellency.

Although Conservatives fought the move bitterly, Premier Hepburn did not alter his position. He stated in Nova Scotia, the Lieutenant-Governor had no official residence; Alberta had decided to discontinue maintenance of its Lieutenant-Governor's home; and similar action was contemplated in Manitoba.

France Rejects All Suggestions of Direct Negotiations

CLUES UNEARTHED IN THEFT CASE

Police Believe Wearing Apparel Stolen Will be Recovered

"I do not believe our trip was in vain as the Toronto police seemed quite optimistic in regard to the possible recovery of the articles stolen from my place of business," stated Mr. E. C. Sprague, manager of Sprague's Cleaning and Pressing establishment, that was robbed of nearly $3,000.00 worth of wearing apparel some time early Saturday morning. "Although there is nothing for publication, the authorities in Toronto believe they have unearthed one clue, that may be of paramount importance in the matter of the recovery of the goods," added Mr. Sprague following the return to the city of Detective Fred Izard and Mr. Sprague last night after the hunt early Saturday and the better part of Sunday in an effort to get with the Toronto police in reference to the case. The police still firmly believe that the goods were stolen and transported to Toronto by motor car.

A new and startling clue in the case was unearthed by the local police on Saturday when the rear seat of a sedan was found abandoned near the scene of the robbery on College Street. The rear seat was discovered in the ditch north of Sprague's cleaning establishment, where it had been apparently hurled hurriedly, as the robbers tried to cover up their tracks. The rear seat was today identified as the rear seat of a well known make of sedan. The seat was removed to the police station for safe keeping in the meantime circulars, describing the goods stolen were printed and sent to the police departments of larger centres. Both Mr. Sprague and the police are hourly awaiting information, that may lead to the recovery of the stolen articles. In the meantime a large number of local residents are without their clothes.

75,000 Parade The Boardwalk At Sunnyside

Varied and strange events placed a multi-colored robe of circumstance Sunday about the world's celebration of Easter.

While Pope Pius XI delivered his Easter benediction in St. Peter's Plaza in Vatican City, prayers were being offered for rain in dust-stricken, drought-blighted area of the United States.

While 75,000 Torontonians paraded along the Lake Shore boardwalk and 100,000 New Yorkers paraded along sunny Fifth Avenue, Yucatan Indian thunder drums echoed thru the upland villages of Arizona and Socorro, Mexico, in a Christian-pagan festival.

While Christians, Moslems and Jews by the thousands crowded into Jerusalem for Easter and Passover services—where Christ preached for peace, long centuries ago—one of the bloodiest massacres of the Bolivia-Paraguay Chaco hostilities took place in South America.

At St. Thomas Episcopal Church in Washington, Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the United States President, placed a ball cross of white lilies at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at sunrise services in Arlington amphitheatre.

The deep coloring of the Grand Canyon in Arizona, was lit by a glowing sun as 500 worshippers gathered for sunrise services.

Mary Pickford reunited and Maria Jeritza sang before 25,000 persons at Los Angeles.

MANY AGENCIES CAUSE THE TASTE

Everything Possible Be-ing Done to Relieve Situation

A noticeable flat taste in the city water supply during the past week or so was ascribed today by Manager E. T. Austin of the local department as being due wholly to seasonal conditions. "It's a seasonal problem at this time of the year for keen eyes to rise from taste. No matter how much you treat it, or what you do, you'll have it almost every waterworks system in the Dominion is bothered with the same thing," added the manager.

Although tests of the local supply sent to Toronto at regular periods have been returned with an A-1 rating, as yet provincial authorities and municipalities have found no way to eliminate what appears to some to be an objectionable taste. Thousands of dollars have been spent in the larger cities on the problem, but as yet no solution has been offered, it was pointed out.

Toronto at the present time has been engaged in super chlorinating their water supply, fresh from the lake, and there has been considerable discussion about the water up there. Other cities have adopted similar methods, Commissioner Austin.

The present water supply is being treated with activated carbon in an attempt to remove the foreign taste from the water, and this to a large measure is a successful method. The water is being given the application of charcoal before being filtered through the beds. Since the installation of the filtering system at the local plant the chlorine and alum treatment has been cut down to the lowest possible level, it was explained.

Surface water running into the bay from the sewage works, the disturbance of the water by the spring breakup of ice, and other factors have combined to lend the taste to the water.

An estimated 12,000,000 persons are in the throes of famine conditions in China and hundreds of thousands have been reduced to eating the bark of trees, roots and even clay, it was disclosed today.

One investigator found a father who had to feed his 18 year old son for the equivalent of 8c a day, and another case where a husband had sold his wife for $5 in Chinese currency (about $2.) Relief workers there already have found famine persons have thrown themselves upon the charity of this city alone.

Hunan, Anhwei and Honan, provinces are the most acute sufferers, especially Hunan, where a particularly scorching drought is the basic cause of the suffering. Floods have also spread Communist pillaging in Anhwei province. Fight before Chiang Kai-shek's armies began, Reds looted Kaifoli.

Conditions in the famine area were vividly described by a representative of the Interprovincial Drought Relief Association, with headquarters in this district, 30 miles southwest of Nanking.

"In one place I found a group of famine sufferers encamped in a grove of about 100 elm trees. They had stripped the bark clean from all the trees and had eaten it for food," he said. "In other districts the hunger-crazed people have no less were mixing bran and water and baking the resulting fo what little nourishment it might contain."

Hundreds of persons trapped in debris could be heard appealing for rescue. Despairing relief workers in their efforts handicapped by inefficient equipment, were able to reach only a small percentage of the injured.

P. E. Co. Philatelic Society Holds Interesting Exhibition

Picton—Prince Edward County Philatelic Society Exhibition held in the court room of the county buildings on Wednesday afternoon and evening, April 17th, drew an enthusiastic number of interested visitors of all ages. Men well past middle-life displayed the enthusiasm of boys in the exhibits, and boys and girls showed keen interest beyond what one would expect of their years as stamps were displayed and discussed.

The President, Dr. F. A. Scott, opened the evening exhibition. He explained that the "canvas" possessed the junior stamp club, and stamp exhibits. He offered a word of criticism of the exhibits, explaining that a perfect stamp rates higher than a damaged stamp and that in the prizes the society had aimed to give perfect stamps. Many of these prize stamps were quite valuable, he explained, some worth as much as 75c each.

Dr. C. R. Wright then read the list of prize winners from town and county.

It contained a wonderful collection of Canadian and Newfoundland stamps and was worth many hundreds of dollars.

Dr. Stothers also referred to the special cancellation covers used hundred years old, exhibited by Leighton Hall Sidney. These were mailed before we had envelopes. The sheet was folded, sealing wax was used, with a seal to close the letter's seal ring. The signature of the post master showing postage had been paid could be seen. There were no stamps in those days.

EASTER CELEBRATION

Easter was evident in all its phases on Sunday. In the churches the most vital of the aspects of the celebration were marked in a manner which showed the vitality of the faith in the Resurrection and the zeal of the worshippers. Under the influence of a spring day, and flowers of the season with which the churches were adorned and with the accompaniment of the noblest music which has been penned by man, and the thought and inspiration of sermons, the message of the event was borne into the hearts of crowded congregations.

While in the afternoon the weather turned chilly, there were large numbers of persons walking in their Easter finery and Belleville matrons, young ladies, girls, and little misses had no small part to play on this memorable time.

The spirit of Eastertide was manifest on all hands. It seemed as if the celebration was marked with greater joy and sense of liberation of mind than ordinarily, under the appreciable lifting of that cloud and removal of the repression which has oppressed the world in every sphere of human interest for some years.

CITY WILL CELEBRATE KING'S JUBILEE

Belleville will observe the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of His Majesty King George Fifth to the British Throne and so join hands with every part of the Empire in the observance of this time, which is a happy occasion in the midst of a world of discontent and turmoil. This anniversary is a symbol of that peace within the Empire which is one of the remarkable features of the rule of His Majesty.

Belleville recalls with pleasure His Majesty's visit here at the turn of the century as the Duke of York in the days of the reign of his father, King Edward Seventh, and will not stop to pass the present occasion of rejoicing without due ceremonies.

GAME FISH

Those who are interested in the game fish as an attraction for the native and tourist will be interested to read a story from Montreal appearing on page five of this issue explaining the steps taken by anglers to endeavor to have the waters of Lake St. Louis and those about the Island of Montreal improved. Net fishing is not in favor, and it is understood that the Quebec Minister has given his undertaking that the denuding of the waters of game fish by net fishing will be stopped. A petition against net fishing has been circulated and freely signed in that district.

FORMOSAN DISASTER

The disaster which has struck the Island of Formosa, causing a loss of nearly three thousand lives and rendering a quarter of a million persons homeless and without food arouses the sympathy and the desire to help the unfortunate in all parts of the world. That part of the world has borne a record of holocausts from quakes and tidal floods.

THANK YOUR DENTIST

The hardy cave-dweller of old never had modern delicacies like cake, creamed chicken and ice cream.

He gnawed his meat off the bone and ate unhulled gain—and, according to some modern theorists, because of that fact he had healthy teeth.

However, Dr. E. B. Renaud, professor of anthropology at Denver University, has been looking at the skulls of ancient cliff dwellers in Mesa Verde National Park, and he finds evidence to the contrary.

These old-timers, who lived on coarse, tough foods all their lives, have cavities in plenty, suffered from toothache just as we do, and also had pyorrhea.

And one must shudder painfully to think of having toothache in a land where the only possible remedy was to summon a neighbor and have him knock the decayed tooth out of your head with a pointed stone.—Vancouver Sun.

GOVERNMENTS SHOULD ARRANGE

While this columnist has been campaigning for years for the closing to commercial fishing of the mouth of the Napanee River, Hay Bay and Muscote Bay in an effort to provide an undisturbed breeding ground for the maskinonge, pickerel and small mouth bass, and the feeding ground for the wild ducks, he has never gone so far as to seek the withdrawing from the Bay of Quinte of all the nets used by fishermen to make their living.

At Belleville last week when the Bay of Quinte Tourist and Publicity Association was formed, one of the speakers suggested that the Bay from one end to the other be closed to commercial fishing and that the fishermen be licensed as guides. His idea was not to cut them off suddenly but to gradually reduce the number of commercial fishermen yearly until such time as there were none left. He was of the opinion that in ten years the government would secure more revenue out of the Bay from the tourists than it could ever hope to receive from the fishermen and the fishermen in turn would make better wages than they are now making.

There are several matters pertaining to the Bay of Quinte that should not be lost sight of when speaking about ourbing the activities of the commercial fisherman. The most important one is that the Tyendinaga Indian Reserve borders on a ten mile stretch of the Bay and that in the past Ontario game officials have been told to keep off these waters to keep out of trouble. Knowing then that the Indian has certain rights, whether these rights are legal or illegal, in the manner in which he gets his fish in waters close to the reserve, what is there to prevent white men taking up residence on the reserve and either running seines themselves or getting the Indians to run them. This is something that should be thoroughly investigated. Indeed, no white man living on the Indian reserve should be sold a commercial license to fish in the Bay of Quinte. Nor should he be permitted to fish any other way as long as he is a resident of the reserve. This should prevent white people from taking up residence on the reserve for the sole purpose of fishing illegally and by illegal means.

And the fur brings up another point. The Indians are wards of the Dominion Goverment. They have resented the actions of the Provincial Game and Fisheries overseers going on the reserve and seizing seines. Years ago a Deseronto game warden seized nets along the Indian Reserve and the Indians took the matter to the Crown. Provincial overseers made a clean-up of seines on the reserve one night only to be told by the department at Toronto not to attempt that again.

It is quite evident that commercial fishing in the Bay of Quinte by white residents but what can be done about the Indians? This would appear to be a matter for Dominion and Provincial Governments to settle, and it should be settled to give the new Bay of Quinte Tourist and Publicity Association a better chance to function for the betterment of all.—Trenton Courier-Advocate.

RAM ROASTING

A feature of the annual fair at Kingsteignton, near Newton Abbot, in South Devon, is the ceremonial roasting of a ram. This takes place on Whit-Tuesday (June 11). The legend is that when in far-off days the village was cut off and flooded up, the sacrifice of a ram brought down torrents of water from the moors. The roasting and distribution of the ram are accompanied by Morris dancing and old English sports. At St. Ives, in Huntingdonshire, children throw dice for Bibles which are purchased each year, under an old will, with the rent of the parish property, "Bible Orchard." The dicing takes place on June 11.—Coming Events in Britain.

THE BETRAYAL OF YOUTH

One of the most tragic aspects of the world crisis is the soul-crushing effect it is having upon the youth of the nations. Millions of young men and women have today no jobs to go to and no pocket money to spend. What that means their elders may realize when they recall the occasions in their own lives when pennilessness seemed the most intolerable of afflictions.

But the young people of today see no escape from their plight. There are 30,000,000 unemployed in the world. According to the International Labor Office, 25 per cent of these are young persons under the age of 25. The percentage varies in different countries.

No figures are given for Canada, but it probable that an equally startling proportion of young people on the threshold of adulthood are faced with the same blank wall of hopelessness. The effect of this frustration cannot be exaggerated. Youth, denied its heritage, seeks the answer either in bitter introspection or in outward impulse. Too often the former leads to dangerous brooding on wrongs and too often the latter to temptations ending in crime.

Both are inimical to a healthy social outlook. But much longer are the young people—young people who are more and more convinced of the artificial nature of the present situation—expected to tolerate this denial of rightful opportunity?—Ottawa Citizen.

SPRING'S WARES

Come, come with me into the woods
And see how Spring spreads out her goods,
Like any merchant at a fair,
Though hers are wares beyond compare.
For she has emeralds by the mile
And she can scatter stars that smile
Along the hedgerow, while she gives
The brook a little song that lives
Not elsewhere, save in lovers' hearts.
(And even thence, too soon departs!)
On wild plum and on dogwood see
White clouds, all piled in a tree;
Come, come into the woods, now hush
And hear joy turned into a thrush!

—Aline Michaelis.

"MISTAKES OF MOSES" AND OTHERS

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, in four volumes, told how the war could have been conducted to greater advantage, less loss of life and with much smaller expenditure of money.

x

Looking backward one can see the height of all the hurdles, most of which we could have jumped with ease instead of going around, if we had but known how much smaller they were than they looked.

x

However, the little Welshman's hindsight is well-nigh perfect, whatever his foresight might have been.

x

Reading the first two volumes of Lloyd George's Memoirs, the reader is convinced that the conduct of the war was just one big series of mistakes from the standpoint of the Allies.

x

Reading the second two volumes the ordinary reader rather grasps the idea that in this war over a war the civilian mind is trying to win a victory over the military mind without giving the latter an opportunity for rebuttal.

x

The British and Allied military strategy was to win the war on the Western Front, if possible, in any event to keep the Germans at bay.

x

David Lloyd George's idea was to keep a lot of little campaigns going on other fronts to keep Germany's allies busy at home and thus away from the Western Front.

x

David Lloyd George makes out a very good case from the civilian standpoint, but who can say what might have happened if the Allied resistance had been weakened enough on the Western Front to permit the Germans to crash through, possibly take Paris and the Channel ports.

x

German victories of any magnitude on the Western Front would only have been disastrous—how disastrous who can say?

x

The military mind, trained to other methods of warfare may have been slow to respond to Germany's more up-to-date methods, but it was still a military mind and capable of seeing future consequences perhaps better than the civilian mind—and after all, if the Allies had not held the Germans back on the Western Front until weakened by depletion of supplies caused by the naval blockade, disheartened by the failure of the submarine campaign and frightened by the appearance in the field of fresh armies from th United States —the German war machine might have conquered.

x

And so the debate after all is between the civilian mind and the military mind as to whether the war was conducted to the best advantage.

x

And does it get us anywhere to argue about it.

x

Just let us try and prevent any future such insanity as mass murder in its most malignant forms.
